Empty-Shelf Warning from Some Stores

Times News Services

Empty shelves and food shortages will be the result of the provincial government's price freeze, spokesmen for supermarkets and drug stores said Friday.

Sam Bass, president of London Drugs, said that if the freeze does not allow adjustments for increased costs, shelves will be empty.

"Nobody is going to tell me I'm going to sell at a loss," said Bass, in Vancouver.

"There's going to be a lot of empty shelves. Nobody's going to subsidize Barrett's whims."

Bass said drug firms buy 100 per cent of their stock from outside the provinces.

"There is nothing manufactured in B.C. We get everything from back East."

Shirley Brown, spokesman for Super Valu stores and Kelly Douglas Co. Ltd. said Super Valu will have to comply with the government's order but to do so will mean "tremendous shortages."

She said that 80 per cent of the beef, pork, and luncheon meats sold in British Columbia comes from Alberta.

"Eighty-nine per cent of the drygoods on our supermarket shelves are purchased from outside B.C.," said Brown.

"At this time of year, 65 per cent of our farm produce is imported.

"A price freeze just isn't that simple. B.C. does not produce sufficient food to meet its food requirements.

"In the short term there is an advantage to the consumer, but in the long term the effects on B.C.'s economy will be devastating.

"When there are food shortages, there will be a reduction in the labor requirements and drastic effects on the nutritional intake of our customers."

Barrett's order raises questions which she hopes will be answered quickly, she added.

"If we're going to have our purchasing power frozen, then we're not going to be able to buy. Let's face it, we're just not going to stock it.

The higher minimum wage will be a jolt to the tourist industry and the new rent control program could prove very harmful, Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Jack Hutchins said today.

The premier made a big mistake in reducing the rent increase ceiling from 10.6 per

Massive Price Freeze Imposed by Barrett

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

A 68-day freeze on the price of food and other basic commodities hit B.C. like a bombshell Friday when Premier Barrett imposed a massive new economic controls program.

As of 5 p.m. Friday the prices of food, drugs, energy and public transport are frozen until Jan. 1.

Tariffs on intro-provincial rail transport and trucking of food and drugs in the province are also frozen.

A new rent control program was introduced with an 8 per cent ceiling on increases.

Purpose of the program is to see prices do not increase in the period before the federal anti-inflation program comes into full effect, Barrett said.

B.C. has maintained the federal scheme does not adequately control prices and profits and therefore is not fair to the average citizen.

In Ottawa, Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said the freeze will have no effect on the federal anti-inflation program.

The federal government has no intention of instituting a general price freeze, he added.

"I'd have to look at his (Barrett's) plans more closely before commenting in detail, but I can say that we obviously haven't gone for a general freeze, and the B.C. announcement won't cause us to depart from that position."

Asked if he thought the Barrett program will work, he said "there are many prices that just can't be frozen."

The price freeze, along with a package designed to ease the effects of inflation on low income earners, is B.C.'s solution to making the Ottawa program fairer and more equitable.

"This decision did not come easily. I am aware that it will create some difficulties," said Barrett.

"But the alternative is a case-by-case review of all price increases, which would require a large bureaucracy in Victoria, and interminable paper work for business people.

"More importantly, it would offer no immediate price relief to the people of our province."

The freeze will be administered by the consumer services department but Barrett said he did not envision a massive hiring of new people although employees may be seconded from other departments.

No penalties are included in the cabinet order setting out the freeze but Barrett said usual penalties included in provincial summary convictions legislation will apply to those who break the law.

The freeze is imposed under terms of the Consumer Services Act which allows the cabinet to bring in "such measures as the minister deems necessary to control prices within the province in order to minimize the erosion

Useful, Says Gibson

Provincial Liberal leader Gordon Gibson said his party will support the government freeze.

All provinces should bolster the federal wage and price controls by introducing economic guidelines which relate specifically to their own situations, he added.

He described the Barrett measures as a "useful assistance" to the federal program and an indication of B.C.'s willingness to co-operate with Ottawa.

However, he criticized the Barrett government for doing nothing to create jobs with its program and said the plan should have included some incentives for private investment in basic industries.

Conservative leader Scott Wallace said he has not decided whether his party will back the provincial measures but agreed with increases in the minimum wage and mincome, a program that provides minimum payments to persons on fixed incomes.

He said he was surprised there are powers to allow the provincial government to introduce "sweeping and massive" controls without debate in the legislature.

As of noon today Social Credit leader Bill Bennett had made no comment on the government's move leaving Dr.

HIGHLIGHT of the official opening of Oak Bay's new recreational centre Friday night was a jocular swimming duel between Mayor Brian Smith, poolside, and Ken Hurn, chairman of Oak Bay's parks and recreation commission. Smith won handsomely, if not honestly, being pulled most of the length of the pool on the other end of a ski tow rope, hauled in by four conspirators concealed in a washroom. (See story on page 13.)

. . . And Bonuses For Elderly, Poor

A 20 per cent increase in B.C.'s minimum wage, an increase in Mincome and new housing programs are new initiatives promised by the provincial government in its new economic program.

Premier Barrett said Friday that besides fighting inflation the government wants to ensure "that the impact of fighting inflation is shared on a fair and equitable basis."

In addition to the freeze on basic prices, therefore, Barrett brought in a host of initiatives to give advantage to low income earners in the province.

But public servants will be required to stick to federal wage guidelines and senior civil servants will receive no wage increases along with cabinet ministers and MLAs.

The additional measures include:

—a $10 increase in Mincome in addition to the regular cost-of-living boost on Jan. 1;

—an increase in the B.C. minimum wage from $2.50 an hour to $2.75 on Dec. 1 and to $3 on June 1, 1976;

—new housing initiatives including a government first mortgage program with lower rates for low-income families;

Most of these schemes will require legislation and Barrett said the legislation will be brought in during the fall session, expected to begin in mid-November.

Mincome now stands at just under $250 a month but the regular federal cost-of-living adjustment to old-age pensions would boost that to $255 on Jan. 1.

The new increase will bring to $265 a month the level of guaranteed income for senior citizens and the handicapped.

Barrett estimated that program will cost the government between $10 million and $12 million annually.

B.C. hopes the federal government will change the area of its program which limits low-income earners to wage increases of not more than $600 a year while those earning $24,000 can earn salary boosts of up to $2,400.

"The federal proposal provides the smallest increase to those who are already suffering most from inflation," said Barrett.

To fight this trend and to help the unorganized worker in B.C., he said, the minimum wage will increase to $3 an hour.

At the next sitting of the house, Barrett said he will bring in legislation to create a Housing Corporation of B.C. to expand the government's housing activities.

The program of land-banking will be expanded to dampen land speculation, he said, and large sums of capital will be available to the new corporation.

Through the government's new B.C. Savings and Trust Corporation, expected to be in operation as a near-bank next year, the province plans to offer a new first mortgage program.

"First mortgages will be available to the public at rates that take account of ability to pay," said Barrett.

Labor Reaction Cautious But Support Expected

B.C. labor leaders were hesitant in their reaction to provincial additions to price and wage controls, but are expected to support the package which contains many of the provisions pushed for by the labor movement.

The guidelines bring more than 100,000 additional workers in B.C. under the eight per cent wage increase ceiling, including provincial, municipal and hospital employees and teachers.

The four groups earlier this week banded together to fight the federal wage control program "because of the inequities in it."

B.C. Teachers' Federation president Bill Broadley who was involved in the effort to urge the provincial government to correct the inequities, said today the provincial package is a "significant step" towards that goal.

"It's only until Jan. 1, but if the federal government picks up on the plan it should go a long way to protect incomes. If the federal government allows it to die, the inequities will be back again," he said.

The 26,000-member federation is now involved in bargaining with the B.C. School Trustees association and had earlier announced wage demands of about 20 per cent.

A trustees' association spokesman said the organization would be happy to follow the federal and provincial controls but wants the government to ensure the controls are legal.

The 35,000-member B.C. Government Employees Union expected it would be covered by the federal guidelines and is not concerned about the same controls being imposed by the provincial government, union general secretary John Fryer said today.

The union has already negotiated its master contract for all employees and is expected to enter component bargaining soon. The results of the ratification vote on the master contract are expected to be announced this weekend.

FRANCO NEAR DEATH

MADRID (UPI) — Generalissimo Francisco Franco, 82, showing increasing signs of heart failure after two major heart attacks in a week, received the last rites of the Roman Catholic church today. His family gathered at his bedside in El Pardo palace and medical experts said the end must be near.

The experts said that the old soldier, victor of Spain's bloody civil war and its one-man ruler for nearly 40 years, was fighting and losing his last battle for survival.

They said death probably would come in a matter of hours, paving the way for the transfer of power to Prince Juan Carlos de Borbon, 37, Franco's designated successor who is to become Spain's first king in 44 years.

Franco's increasingly critical condition was disclosed in a medical bulletin issued after noon, signed by his 11 doctors.

It spoke of "increasing congestive heart failure" and said this had been aggravated by fluid in the lungs, making breathing difficult, distension of the abdomen and temporary intestinal paralysis.

About two hours later, the doctors reported no change in Franco's condition which they said remained "grave."

With the news of the Caudillo's apparently approaching end, life slowed throughout Spain and small groups assembled outside the El Pardo palace.

CUPE Members Jeer Trudeau

Times News Services

Prime Minister Trudeau and his wife, Margaret, were mobbed by a jeering crowd of civil servants angered by federal wage and price control policy in Toronto Friday.

Trudeau was there to address a Rotary Club luncheon and the demonstrators were members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, which is holding its national convention in the same hotel.

They shouted "control Trudeau" and sang the song, Solidarity Forever.

Trudeau halted at one point to speak to the angry protesters, but the crowd pressed in close around him, and choruses of boos drowned out his words.

In his speech to nearly 1,000 Rotarians, Trudeau said the new economic policy represented a new era in Canada's economic and social history.

"The test is whether we can rediscover as Canadians that will to co-operate in a democratic manner."

Runaway inflation was the result of "everybody trying to catch up with everybody else" to protect themselves against any future increases in the cost of living and the new policy was aimed at equitable sharing of the nation's wealth in the face of rising costs, he said.

The prime minister said that "the government does not like controls any more than anyone else.

"You asked for leadership — you've got it," he said.

Meanwhile, in Ottawa finance minister Donald Macdonald said the federal anti-inflation board can demand prior notification of price increases for cars and some household goods.

But advance notice on food price increases would be hard to ask, he added.

EXPORTS LAGGING

OTTAWA (CP) — Exports lagged $1.043 billion behind imports during the first nine months of this year, Statistics Canada reported Friday.

The deficit compared with a surplus of $1.332 billion in the value of merchandise trade during the same January-September period last year.

The largest single factor in this year's performance was oil.

Basic Pay Boost Rapped by C of C

cent to 8 per cent or less, Hutchins added.

There already is a serious shortage of rental accommodation and this will be aggravated by the new rent limits, he said.

"People planning to build apartments will go to some other province. There's no incentive for them to build apartments here."

Costs to landlords are increasing by at least 10 per cent per year, especially when five-year mortgages come up for renewal at higher interest rates, he said. Apartment owners will be lucky to break even and many will be in a loss position.

The minimum wage boost will produce a bonanza for waitresses, especially those who are in a position to get a large number of tips, but will force restaurants to increase prices, he said.

The complaints from tourists this year about Victoria prices could be intensified next year, he warned.

Otherwise the premier's program will be well accepted by the business community, although there should be provision for some exemptions if cost pressures become too severe on supermarkets and drug stores, Hutchins said.

William Lindsay, president of the Greater Vancouver Real Estate Board, reacted positively to the housing and mortgage proposals.

"We welcome any action which will provide more housing for people," he said.

The reaction of the B.C. financial community was generally favorable.

"It's a damned gutsy move. It shows leadership and I'm in favor of anything positive in fighting inflation," said Frank Trebell, chairman of Yorkshire Trust.

Trebell said he did not think the first mortgages to be provided through government legislation this fall would make much difference to the housing situation unless the provincial government is talking "in terms of half a billion dollars."

Trebell questioned where the government would get the funds from. "What can Barrett do? He can go into the market and compete for deposits. But he'll have to pay the same interest we pay our depositors — 10 to 10.5 per cent.

"Or he can subsidize with public money. In that case he'd be welcome to deposit the money with us at six per cent and we'd be delighted to put it out for mortgages at eight per cent."

Trevor Pilles, president of the Bank of B.C., said Barrett's move should make the wage guidelines more acceptable.

Ottawa's guidelines left a lot of unexplained areas but Barrett was being very specific, said Pilley.

Don Bellamy, director of the Canadian Restaurant Association, said he hoped the announced food prices freeze would allow the restaurant industry "to sit on menu prices for a while."

B.C. Prices Frozen Until 1976

of the purchasing power of consumers."

It appears the government is depending on individual consumers to do the policing of the freeze and Barrett said Consumer Services Minister Phyllis Young will launch an advertising campaign next week.

Asked if the government might extend the freeze beyond the 68 days if it doesn't support Ottawa's price controls as they are implemented under the federal Anti-Inflation Board, Barrett said he is "sure" Ottawa will follow its program strictly.

"I don't see that that will be necessary because the federal government has said it wants to contral prices and I'm sure they are sincere in that," he said.

Barrett said the province's lawyers have determined the government is fully within its rights in the constitution to bring in its own price controls.

The move does not amount to wartime measures, he said, because B.C. is simply following up on the program already initiated by federal authorities.

Under the cabinet order imposing the freeze, commodities included are described as: foodstuffs and beverages, at the retail and wholesale level, excluding those sold in restaurants; drugs as defined by the pharmacy act; and proprietary or patent medicines. Farmers and fishermen are exempt from the food freeze.

Services under the freeze are bus or ferry services provided by the government or its agencies and railway passenger or freight services subject to the jurisdiction of the legislature.

Prices of electricity, natural gas, propane, butane, petroleum products and steam heat are all controlled by the orders; pipeline tolls may not increase; and trucking firms may not increase rates for the transport of food and drugs.

The freeze applies to transactions at the retail, wholesale and processing levels.

The new formula for rent controls will take into account the cost increases facing landlords, increases in municipal taxes and a factor to compensate landlords for inflation, said the premier.

Here's how the INFLATION FIGHTER adjustment works.
We don't know what the increase in The Consumer Price Index will be next year. But in 1974 it was 12.4%. And over the twelve months ended August 31st, 1975, it was 11.1%. So, just as an example, let's use the figure for the twelve months ending August 31st, 1975, to show you how the INFLATION FIGHTER CERTIFICATE works: Suppose you deposited $1,000.00 in our 5-Year INFLATION FIGHTER CERTIFICATE.

Your guaranteed interest for the year would be:	$95.00
Your Inflation Adjustment would be:	$10.54

Labor Reaction Cautious

clause and Fryer said the union has gained a ruling from the federal anti-inflation board that the clause is not covered by the federal guidelines.

Fryer said the provincial government could go against that ruling and include the cost-of-living adjustment increase as part of the allowable eight per cent increase, but it is not expected.

He said the price freeze on basic commodities and the rent controls remove some of the injustices in the federal program.

Executive members of the 8,000-member Hospital Employees Union are meeting today in Vancouver to discuss their reaction to the provincial package.

It is believed that the union was about to ask for an exemption from the wage controls, but the new provincial guidelines may change that.

The union is about to start bargaining a new contract with the B.C. Hospitals Association. The present agreement expires Dec. 31.

Wage demands include a $1.50 an hour across the board increase for all hospital employees. The percentage of increase varies with each classification, but all would be above the eight per cent.

Ray Mercer, head of the Canadian Union of Public Employees in B.C. which covers most municipal workers, said today he would have to have more time to study the guidelines before commenting.

The B.C. Federation of Labor has made no statement on the provincial addition to the controls.

The 30-member executive council of the Canadian Labor Congress Friday announced its opposition to the federal controls and said it would organize to fight the measures.

CLC president Joe Morris said the congress cannot accept an anti-inflation program which does not include provisions to increase the supply of housing, reduce unemployment, curb land speculation, increase old age pensions and regulate oil and gas prices. But the B.C. program does contain many of those provisions and it is expected that the congress will come out in support of the provincial approach to inflation.

LEADERS SPEAK

Pat McGeer as the party's official spokesman.

McGeer indicated support for the program but said the premier had left out the most important element in inflation —wage increases in the government sector.

Civil service and Crown corporation wage settlements have been outrageous and "the premier really should get his own house in order before he asks anyone else to put their house in order," McGeer added.

Earlier Friday, Wallace held a Vancouver news conference in which he came out with his own proposals for an amended wage and price control program for B.C.

Among his proposals, issued before the Barrett announcement, was legislation to give B.C. power to impose selective price freezes of up to 120 days.

His party had concluded after a study of the federal white paper and legislation on controls that "applied to B.C., the present program cannot adequately work," he said.

Liberal senator Ray Perrault said in Vancouver that Barrett's move indicates the B.C. government will cooperate with Ottawa's guidelines which were announced Thanksgiving Day.

Hollow CLC War Cry on Controls

By PETER THOMSON
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Canadian Labor Congress president Joe Morris Friday emitted a hollow war cry in opposition to the fedeal government's price and wage controls.

Morris told a press conference that the CLC is creating a fund to oppose the government's program.

He stated, however, that if legislation enforcing the guidelines passes through Parliament, he will not recommend any illegal strike action to disrupt the program.

He blamed the entire inflation situation on government expansion of the money supply, claiming that it should be geared closely to the rate of economic growth in the country.

Morris said the CLC adamantly opposed "this cold, calculated move by the government to fight inflation on the backs of all working men and women in Canada."

Announcing "outright rejection" of the program Morris said the CLC has sent a telegram to Prime Minister Trudeau demanding withdrawal of the legislation that will put government guidelines into effect.

He told newsmen that the CLC 30-member executive council had decided to launch a nation wide campaign to expose the injustices and failings of the government's program to restrain wage and price increases.

The CLC represents about two million Canadian workers.

Morris said the government's program will fail because it "cannot control prices, corporate income, professional fees, nor does it intend to control interest rates."

He said the trade union movement in Canada will pursue their collective bargaining objectives "with vigor and determination" in the private and public sectors without paying attention to the guidelines until the law enforcing them is passed.

He said the congress will hire experts in constitutional law to advise the Congress on procedures to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada in order to challenge constitutionality of the guidelines contained in Bill C-73.

He insisted that the CLC cannot accept an anti-inflation program that does not include provisions to increase the supply of housing—ignoring the government's pledge to bring in such legislation.

He called for legislation to curb land speculation, increase old age pensions and regulate oil and gas prices which, he said, have seriously fueled inflation.

Despite his vehement criticism, Morris denied that the CLC will propose a general strike, or anything like it, to fight the controls.

"I am a law abiding citizen," he said.

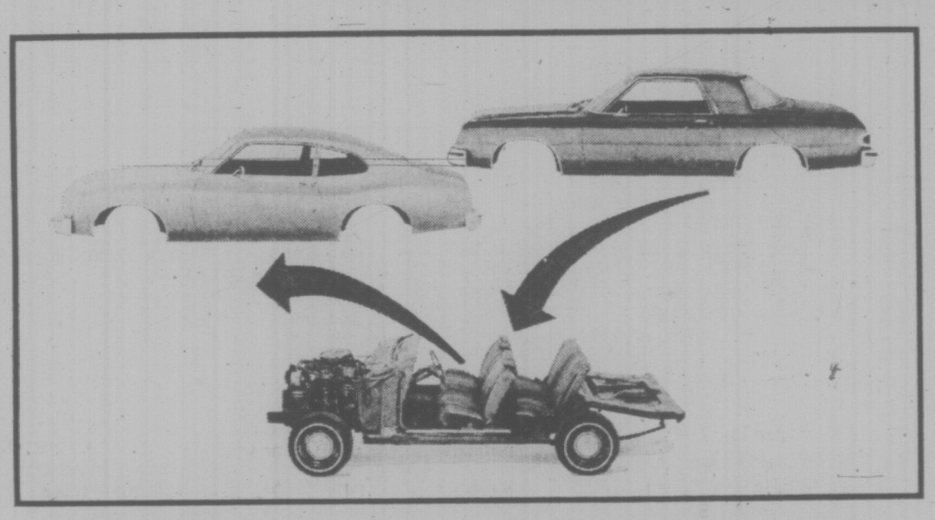
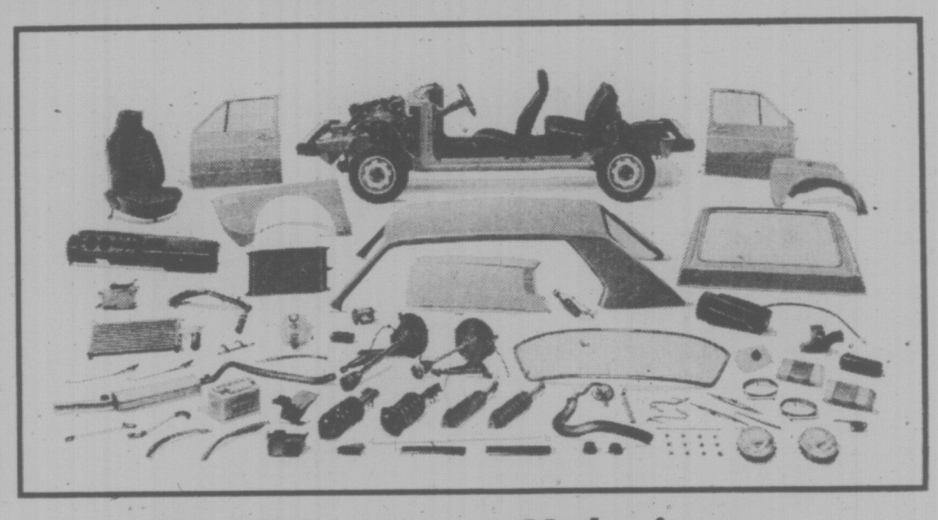
NEW.

What does it mean?





The Detroit concept: Make it look new.

It's probably the most powerful word in advertising.

And often the emptiest.

Because it's been abused so much.

Make a modest change in a product and right away it's NEW!

Make two little changes and it's NEW NEW!

Some advertisers have gone so far as to label their products ALL NEW!

Which, if you stop for a moment and analyze it, is somewhat redundant.

For instance, last year almost every major American car manufacturer introduced new insides on old outsides. And spent gigantic budgets promoting their NEW cars.

But are these cars really new? Hardly.

Five Long, Hard Years.

Five years ago, we set out to design the car of the future.

We wanted to build the perfect car not only for today, but for the next twenty (maybe more) years.

To do that properly, we had to start from ground zero, taking everything into consideration–primarily economy, handling, safety, comfort, performance.

Let's take economy.

With the price of gas skyrocketing–and with no relief in sight–we felt we had to build a car that didn't get good, but great gas mileage.

And so we did. The Rabbit has a unique aerodynamic body design which helped it get an impressive 46 miles per imperial gallon on the highway, and an equally impressive 30 miles per gallon in the city, based on U.S. '76 EPA test results.

Big Mileage: No Big Deal.

Now, more than ever, there's nothing extraordinary about getting high gas mileage–if you don't mind sacrificing performance in the bargain.

The trick is to get both. And Rabbit does.

Despite getting outstanding gas mileage, it also gets from 0 to 50 in 8.2 seconds.

To our knowledge, there is no other car in the world–none–that offers this much gas mileage and this much acceleration together.

A Good Handling Car is a Safe Handling Car.

As far as handling goes, we didn't just stop at things like front-wheel drive and rack-and-pinion steering.

For instance, we designed a totally unique "independent stabilizer rear axle." An axle which significantly increases the stability of the Rabbit on rough roads. And more stability means more safety.

And speaking of safety, we gave the Rabbit features that you'll find on few other cars in the world. Like something called "negative steering roll radius," which helps bring the car to a straight stop in the event of a front wheel blow-out. "Dual diagonal brakes," which means that if either brake circuit fails, directional stability is maintained. And, a uniquely designed double-jointed steering column that breaks aside in the event of impact.

Small Outsides, Big Insides.

Our engine, by the way, is what's called a "transverse engine." Which means it's mounted sideways. That's how we were able to keep the Rabbit so compact on the outside, yet so big and comfortable on the inside (it actually has more head and leg room than some mid-sized American cars!).

Speaking of Detroit.

That brings us to one of the oldest tricks to come out of Detroit yet: making you pay extra for equipment that ought to come standard.

It's deceiving, because not adding that basic equipment keeps the price of the car very low. And that looks good–at first glance.

In reality, when you start tacking on their "extras," you're suddenly adding up to a thousand dollars or more to that low base price. With one automaker, you pay extra for a back seat. True.

The VW concept: Make it new.

Again, Rabbit is different.

It's built as a complete car right from the start.

So you don't pay extra for things like reclining front seats, steel-belted radial tires, a rear-window defogger, a hatchback rear door, and a quick 1.6 litre overhead cam engine. (Some of which, by the way, you can't get on those other cars at any price.)

When you're out checking new car prices just remember. It's what they leave off those other cars that makes them so cheap.

Curl Up With a Good Ad.

Most of the incredible features that we've incorporated into the revolutionary Rabbit we really don't have the space to go into now. However, you'll get a chance to read about them in detail in future ads we're planning to run. We're certain you'll be quite impressed.

But what will impress you even more is stopping in at a VW dealer and actually seeing the Rabbit in the flesh. And, of course, driving it.

You see, if you're in the market for a new car, we think your hard-earned money deserves more than just the word NEW with an exclamation point behind it.

It deserves new, period.

The Amazing Rabbit

WHEEL COVERS OPTIONAL EXTRA.

On Saturday November 1st, come to your Volkswagen Dealer and see what new really means.

Barrett Tips the Scales

Premier Barrett presented what amounts to a mini budget Friday afternoon when he responded to federal wage and price controls introduced last week. As anticipated he capitalized on apparent weaknesses in the federal controls, introducing price freezes on food (farmers and fishermen exempted), drugs, all energy prices and public transit until Jan. 1, 1975. Emphasizing that the federal program lacks fairness and equity he has ordered a number of measures to aid those on low or fixed incomes.

Mincome will be increased by 10 per cent at provincial expense, bringing the total to $265 for singles and $530 for couples, including a $5 federal cost of living adjustment. The minimum wage will rise to $2.75 an hour Dec. 1 and reach $3 June 1, 1976, making it by far the highest in Canada. A new housing corporation will spend "large sums of capital," and a new first mortgage program will provide mortgages at unspecified rates. Salaries of the 100,000 persons in B.C. affected by Ottawa's controls will be limited to the federal rules. Provincial senior civil servants can expect no wage increases next year.

While it will take weeks to sort out the fine print — just as it will with the federal program — the premier's move could cause inflation rather than reduce it. Mincome increases alone will cost between $10 and $12 million in Barrett's own estimate. And what about those large sums for housing? Low first mortgages will also be expensive to implement. Earlier this week this week the premier said provincial revenues were down five per cent. Unless he has a cornucopia tucked away, this generous largesse to the disadvantaged could wreck havoc with the provincial economy. He also made a point of saying current social programs will be maintained.

There will also be raised eyebrows over the 50 cent increase in the minimum wage. Employers are still complaining about the current $2.50 minimum. By next summer this will increase by 20 per cent, 10 per cent more than the federal guidelines for wage increases. Business will be in the position of watching fixed costs increase while it is limited to small price increases under federal guidelines.

Little doubt exists that the government has power to effect these measures. Under the Consumer Services Act cabinet can order "such measures as the minister deems necessary to control prices within the province . . ." The question remains: Has the province gone too far in removing the imbalances of the federal program? Judgment should await more detailed explanations. But the program has the hallmarks of motherhood at a time when an election is probably only months away. Certainly some of these measures were necessary to balance B.C.'s peculiar situation. But Barrett may have tipped the scales the other way. If Bill 146 was a necessity, this mixed bag of goodies is grandstanding. Most food and all drugs are imported. The premier may be controlling empty shelves.

What happens Jan. 1 when the provincial controls are removed? Will federal controls be functioning? On Jan. 21 Barrett's back to work legislation expires. Will there be agreement in B.C.'s overhanging disputes then? The government is gambling on probabilities as it lays the foundation for an eventual election campaign.

Human Rights Versus the College

The British Columbia Human Rights Commission recommendation that a move to force immigrant doctors to serve five years in northern communities is in violation of the Human Rights Act presents the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons and the provincial government with a curious dilemma. The college passed the ruling to applause from the provincial government. It meant less competition in urban areas for doctors, and it provides government with a convenient method of solving doctor shortages in hinterland communities.

A cosy arrangement for all concerned, except immigrant physicians who are effectively exiled until they pay their dues. If all doctors — including those taxpayers have subsidized in B.C. medical schools — were required to do rural apprenticeship, the proposal would be acceptable. As it stands immigrant doctors automatically become second class citizens, the only group within their profession coerced into a defined area. When the idea was originally broached we took issue with it. The Human Rights Commission recommendation reinforces our belief. Both the college and the provincial government should discard this odious idea.

If they don't it would seem almost certain that the Human Rights Commission would start a board of inquiry on the issue. The board has the power of a court in enforcing the act although decisions can be appealed to the Supreme Court of B.C. It would be interesting to see how the court would rule — if the college or government was silly enough to take it that far — on a matter which the United Nations Declaration says people should have the freedom to live and work where they please.

To resolve the current contratemps in B.C. the college should forget it's coercive ruling unless it wants a long court battle invoking everybody from the Human Rights Commission to the United Nations. Little boys should be more careful in making smug rules. There's a new world outside the sandbox.

EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

If the Trudeau administration was as thorough with its controls as it has been with the subsequent public relations campaign we would all be more reassured.

But the prime minister sails through Western Canada dispensing the gospel like a newly converted zealot. In Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, he appealed to Canadians to join "this new crusade," the war on inflation.

"Everybody together has to fight inflation . . . because everybody together was the cause of inflation," he says.

That may explain why one of the lesser priests, Senator Ray Perrault, turned up in my office Friday morning to explain the program.

When the same administration invoked the War Measures Act in 1970 all we got was two RCMP security and intelligence men who wished to view a certain letter to the editor (they didn't see it).

For wage and price controls we get the Senate's majority leader. Variety is the spice of life. And I am not being facetious when I say we appreciate the senator's effort, because many of the plan's details remain obscure.

But newspaper people should remain skeptical, especially when a government works so hard to convince them of the efficacy of any plan.

Already one nationally syndicated columnist, Charles Lynch, has suggested the suspension of the normal standards of criticism, because . . . well, he used the same argument as Trudeau. We're all in this together, yata, yata.

Of course we're all in this together but it doesn't mean we have to wash each others back. If the program fails it will be because it was unfairly conceived or implemented. The public is too bloody-minded for the old soft soap the Liberals dispense so well.

I remember too well the successive waterings of the Carter tax commission. More recently the Syncrude sellout and the emasculation of Petrocan once the government had a safe majority.

And now we have that much ballyhooed instrument of national sovereignty, the Foreign Investment Review Act. One of the gentlemen who administers it told a group of German businessmen in Frankfort this week the act wasn't intended to control foreign investment.

This time 'round the government appears to be at least trying harder. Most of the provinces are happily falling into line. Business is embracing the controls like a long lost dividend. Only labor remains in an ugly mood, not without reason it would seem.

But the prime minister continually emphasizes the government's open mind. Finance Minister Donald Macdonald says he is considering allowing increases of more than $600 for people at the low end of the income scale. Perhaps prices will be controlled prior to increases.

The federal violins are improvising the cadenza.

Still, cynicism keeps gnawing at my vitals. Last year's federal tax cuts flagrantly favored the comfortable. People with incomes over $25,000 received a $500 cut. Lower income categories had a paltry $200 shaved off their tax bill. Interest and dividend income — mostly in the hands of the relatively wealthy — was blessed with a $1,000 deduction.

A little juggling in the unemployment insurance rules resulted in a $20,000 per annum employee paying less than half the rate of a person making $9,000 per annum.

And just months before Pierre's hammer fell top-ranking deputy ministers making $66,000 annually received a $6,000 raise. Lower categories raking in a miserly $54,000 received a $6,500 increase.

These types of action make labor, the poor and retired people on fixed incomes rather cautious about being saved by this government.

Ottawa deserves a chance. When the improvising is finished it will be easier to judge the whole composition.

At this point though, it looks as if the government is putting more rosin on the bow, rather than reworking its sombre music.—G.R.O.

All Kinds of Rosin Don't Improve Tune

Authorities Winked at All the Evidence

By ROB BULL

MONTREAL — The portions of the Quebec crime inquiry report on the carrion trade made public last week pose a fundamental question about politics. Why do governments at all levels pass laws that they seem unwilling to enforce?

The commissioners noted that federal, provincial and municipal legislators have all established standards for the protection of the public from unwholesome meat products.

But since 1964, in this province, newspapers have been publishing stories on a fairly regular basis about the sale of meat unfit for human consumption.

Quebec authorities have been getting confirmation of this trade from their own civil servants since 1967.

Take for example the testimony of Claude Bergeron on the fact that the province had only four inspectors, two of them full-time, to supervise meat handling. Bergeron is director of meat and milk products for the Quebec agriculture department.

Q—"Has the number of inspectors proved inadequate since '72."

A—"Everybody knew it . . ."

Q—"And then you also knew that there was a trade in unfit meat which was being offered for human consumption?"

A—"I learned about it, yes."

After complaints from his inspectors, Bergeron informed the province's deputy minister of agriculture of this "disastrous" situation in some detail.

Q—"And what was the response either in writing or any action to this alarm which you sounded?"

A—"In writing, nothing. I certainly had conversations with the deputy minister . . ."

Q—"But as far the increase of inspection staff is concerned . . . was there any result?"

A—Nothing . . .no."

As for deputy minister Camille Julien, he said:

"We certainly received information from time to time to the effect that there were doubts or problems which could have arisen. To my knowledge, no precise depositions of facts were made to my office. We feared, we suspected, that our structures were not good but we never had precise depositions to the effect that there were problems."

The crime commission, which examined the information provided Julien while it was exposing the systematic trade in rotten meat, disagreed.

Jean Dutil, chairman of Quebec rotten meat probe.

"It seems that at the deputy minister level and consequently the ministerial level, they did not hear this cry of alarm," the report saod.

"We cannot understand how, in the face of memoranda regularly reaching the deputy ministerial level in the agriculture department, they neglected to assure an efficient control of the regulations in question and the commission must conclude that a serious error was made on this point."

But Ottawa, through its legislation on food and drugs, has also been in a position to show it is just as inefficient as the province.

There was a meeting at one point of federal health and agriculture officials, the RCMP and Quebec and Ontario provincial bureaucrats. But there was a problem in getting evidence. Since 1968, there has been no prosecution under the Food and Drug Act against people defrauding the Quebec public with meat unfit for human consumption.

The commission recommended the establishment of a quasi-police force to supervise the application of the relevant federal regulations and suggested changing the law so that the burden of proof would be on the defendant.

The government attitude, coupled with some highly anti-social businessmen, resulted in wide-spread criminal activity over a period of years.

The total absence of basic scruples, a complete unconcern for the health of others, in fact an inconceivable immorality in the pursuit of quick and easy pecuniary gain, together with a manifest negligence on the part of government authorities certainly constitute the principal causes of the illegal marketing of meat unfit for human consumption."

The commission recommends changes in the procedures for disposing of or collecting dead diseased animals and in the training and qualifications of meat inspectors. It suggested that all meat sold be dated and visibly classified with an explanation of these classifications in public view behind or near the meat counter.

It feels special provisions should be made for small abatoirs which the province, in a panic during the crime probe's public hearings, threatened to close down.

It makes the modest proposal that Quebec enforce the law equally across the province. The report explains that electronic eavesdropping played a significant part in obtaining the information they required to recommended that criminal procedures be started against a number of people—the commissioners want charges in the federal law governing police use of electronic eavesdropping.

The suggested changes include extension of the preliminary authorization period for police wiretapping to 90 days, the elimination of an obligatory notice to people who are under electronic surveillance, and the acceptance in court by a police witness of evidence he has obtained through wiretapping without saying how he obtained it as long as his expert credentials are proved. A definition of organized crime is recommended for insertion in the criminal code.

"We believe, obviously," the commissioners wrote, "that there are two categories, among others, in our society: those on one hand whose mission is to protect the public, to fight and eliminate crime as much as possible and, unfortunately, on the other hand, those who do everything possible to profit from the weaknesses, and shortcomings of the entire population."

The commission's public hearings were televised and were given widespread media coverage. The commissioners feel that the increased public awareness of the problem which resulted will aid the fight against crime.

But if the public is to be protected, the commissioners feel that governments have to change.

"In general and at different levels," they wrote, "administrative ponderousness has played a great role in all the chaos which has existed from 1964 until now. It is this same administrative ponderousness which inevitably results in negligence and laxity.

"While in private enterprise, only a moment is often needed to make a decision or to prepare or carry out a particular line of action, the same kind of thing often takes months or even years within government bureaucracies.

"With such a management approach there is often a risk of treating measures which require urgent action on an equal basis with those which can follow a routine process.

"This is what happened in the case submitted to the commission."

There does not appear to be very much anybody can do about that.

But true to form, Ottawa has now gone before the courts to argue that the Quebec crime inquiry should be ended.

Goodwill Scorned

"Surely unique to America is the freeway murder-for-fun." (Charles Foley, Victoria Times, Oct. 15). "Most experts agree that poverty and unemployment are key factors . . . Unemployment, nationally eight per cent, stands as high as 41 per cent among black teenagers . . . President Ford declares himself unalterably opposed to registration of guns or gun-owners. Largely for political reasons Ford's administration does not wish to offend the powerful gun-lobby."

There was work during the Vietnam war — vast training to kill. Dr. James G. Endicott in his October 1975 newsletter states that the U.S. trained, armed and paid an army of well over one million men and a police and secret police force of several hundred thousands. Military supplies worth possibly $3 billion were poured in.

Then — 55 days that shook the world. "The whole gangster-ridden, racketeering outfit collapsed before a people's army offensive." And Kissinger's answer is "nuclear weapons next time."

And already preparations are going forward. The Sept.-Oct. 1975 B.C. Voice of Women Newsletter brings some details:

"A great construction program is being started at Bangor, Washington, about 60 miles south of Victoria . . . It will be a base for nuclear-powered, 550-foot submarines, each armed with 24 missiles. Each missile will have 17 nuclear warheads.

"A total of 408 cities can be wiped out by one submarine from a distance of up to 6000 miles. Four of these monsters will be able to destroy all the major cities in the world in 15 minutes. The U.S. plans to build 10 of them by 1978. Trident, as the fleet of horrors is called, "is not a deterrent nor an interceptor . . . Trident is for first strike."

The suggestion of goodwill as a weapon is scorned as idealistic and impractical. But where have the "practical" men got us? There's a military map in the Pentagon on which a large circle has been drawn as "expendable." With Trident 60 miles away, are we included?—Frances Wilcox, 820 Cook Street.

No Gun Control

As I opened the Victoria Times I was not surprised to see yet another article attacking firearms and their legitimate owners. One would almost think that your newspaper is left-wing controlled and is trying to brainwash the public into accepting harsh, unworkable and unfair gun control laws.

The truth is, there really is no gun problem in Canada. The so-called gun problem is being created by sensationalism, newspaper writers, and moviemakers who see a chance to make hay by climbing on the anti-gun bandwagon.

The problem is not gun control, the problem is crime control and the solution is quick apprehension and punishment of those who use guns in crime. — R. Frederick, Victoria.

More Bureaucracy

Many individuals are asking: What are the main causes of the increased size in the bureaucracy and civil service in our current government?

The causes could simply be a problem of the times, as governments are applying 19th century methods to today's problems. Government must look to modern technology to upgrade its efficiency without creating unemployment.

Their first step is to remove the basic rule that as problems increase so must the size of the bureaucracy. Government must carefully create a climate of opportunity within the production sector of the province with out intervening to a point where it may eliminate the potential future of British Columbia's economy.

Once the climate of opportunity has been established, government should apply a check and balance formula to insure that there are jobs available. Our provincial government should demand that Ottawa limit immigration according to the number of jobs available. With this check and balance formula, government should be able to stop increasing in size.

However, we must first have a government which can create the opportunity for prosperity within the province, and that is one of the reasons I support Social Credit. — Dennis D. Durosz, 3333 Biscoe Drive.

Who Wants to Pull Nuclear Trigger?

OMAHA, Neb.— At the headquarters of Strategic Air Command, the underground centre for the massive United States nuclear arsenal, they are not worried about the Dr. Strangelove situation of someone letting loose a missile at the wrong moment. Within the last few weeks two cases have emerged of air force officers who were forced out of the service for expressing doubts about pulling the nuclear trigger.

At a training course, John Vandermolen of Spokane, Washington, told his superiors that he had no compunction about the use of nuclear weapons against military targets. But he had moral and religious objections to being directly responsible for firing a missile at a population centre. He was promptly sent to various counselling sessions.

Later, according to a petition for reinstatement and back pay which he has filed in a U.S. District Court, Vandermolen spoke to the schools' training director, Colonel John A. Walker, Jr. He listened sympathetically and told Vandermolen that only the President of the United States could or would determine whether nuclear weapons would be used to destroy civilian population centres. Air Force personnel would have to abide by that decision.

According to Vandermolen's current complaint he was advised to transfer to a different section but assured that his Air Force career would not be jeopardised. On transfer to Ellsworth Air Force Base, in North Dakota, he was apparently told that his scheduled promotion to captain was being withheld and a few months later an administrative board expelled him from the service for, among other things, "failing to demonstrate acceptable qualities of leadership", and "unwillingness to accept the obligations and responsibilities expected of an officer."

Last week another officer, Major Harold Hering, of Illinois, who has served for 20 years, was retired against his will for asking at a similar course how he could be sure that a launch order was lawful and not "an irrational act, however, remote," by the President.

The Air Force claims that such cases are extreme. At SAC's headquarters, where visitors are received with the smoothness of a well-drilled publicity machine they acknowledge the existence of a "human reliability program." Everyone working closely with nuclear weapons is automatically included in the program which involves extra screening and periodic medical and psychiatric checks. Exactly what they amount to is not disclosed.

In addition "every member of a crew is responsible for the other members," which they add hastily does not mean "that you have to spy on your buddy." But you are expected to notify the authorities if someone you know is going through unusual financial, marital, or other problems.

By JONATHAN STEELE
Manchester Guardian

In that case, according to Air Force spokesmen, you can be temporarily withdrawn from nuclear operations. Or you can apply yourself to be withdrawn at any time. But in both situations, which occur "fairly frequently," the Air Force says that it is just a temporary transfer which will not affect your career.

Would-be Captain Vandermolen is now testing the truth of that. As far as visitors are concerned, there seem to be two ways of overcoming nuclear doubts. One is to blur the distinction between military and civilian targets. The National Strategic Target List (NSTL) of places selected for nuclear attack are all said to be sites which would "pose a threat" to the United States.

Does that mean urban areas? "I cannot authoritatively say that, sir." Some officers say that nuclear weapons nowadays have the precision of a rapier. Others admit that in the event of a nuclear war "there would have to be a lot of derelict real estate."

The main technique for question-avoidance by crews and visitors alike is to stress the enormous technical expertise, constant readiness and alert professionalism which of necessity go with the job.

Little time is left for moral scruples. In a country of glittering machines the Strategic Air Command's headquarters is the most sophisticated and pricey gadget of them all. They show it off with folksy pride. Public relations, so necessary for disarming the occasional oddball Senator or Congressman, have been refined to a smooth routine.

From the outside the headquarters is a three-storey yellow building that could be a furniture warehouse. Inside they take you past steel doors that in an emergency can close on the staff and several weeks' supplies of rations, and into the command control balcony where they ask you to sit in the general's seat.

Then the first button is pressed. On the 16 foot high screen in front of you the computer flashes in letters of four colours: "Welcome to the command post, Jonathan Steele, God Bless America." Underneath this message the computer prints out a picture of the Stars and Stripes.

Below the balcony 11 men are ranged in front of the screens, as are a series of desks which link them instantaneously with every part of the landbased and airborne nuclear arsenal. Your briefer asks the communications man to call up Eielson Air Force Base in Alaska.

SAC is confident of its numerous failsafe techniques for preventing an accidental detonation, what it calls "positive control." It's continuous airborne alert force stopped in 1968. Nowadays up to 30 per cent of the bomber and tanker force is on 24-hour ground alert. Once sent up after a nuclear warning they fly to a designated turnaround point and must return unless ordered by the President to go on. Only in that case do they launch their weapons.

The question is whether, when the moment comes, they would all do their job. One young officer put it this way. "We have two tasks. The first is not to let people go off their rockers. That's the negative side. The positive one is to ensure that people act without moral compunction."

The crews who are on the human reliability program get no special pay, holiday allowances, nor other incentives. "It is pride that makes us so motivated. Almost without exception people here believe in the mission that we've got."

Kissinger 'Peace' May End in Mideast N-War

Kissinger greets Anwar Sadat during negotiations

By MARK GAYN
Toronto Star

On the night of Oct. 15, 1973, an Israeli armored column crossed the Suez Canal and drove swiftly across the sands, until it had cut off the Egyptian III Corps. Caught on the wrong side of the ditch, the Egyptians soon began to run short of food, water and ammunition. Within 72 hours, thus, what had initially looked like an Egyptian triumph in the Yom Kippur War began to look like a disaster.

The reverse produced consternation in Moscow, which had a great deal at stake in the war. The day after the Israeli crossing, Soviet Prime Minister Alexei Kosygin flew to Cairo for a personal look. I was in Moscow at the time, and I remember that all of us became aware of his departure only because he failed to show up at some important receptions.

He returned on Oct. 19, and the men at the Kremlin met hurriedly to hear his gloomy assessment of the Egyptian position.

At once, a summons was issued to U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, then preparing to leave for Peking. So forceful was Moscow's communication that at 1 a.m. of the 20th he took off for the Soviet Union. What happened at the Kremlin meetings did not remain a secret very long. The Russians told Kissinger that if Washington did not halt the Israelis, they themselves would take action.

From Moscow, Kissinger flew to Israel where he induced the Israeli leaders to stop their victorious push. How did he convince them? One version is that he told the Israelis that if they did not let Egyptian convoys bring supplies to the trapped III Corps, the Americans would themselves fly in food and water. Another version is that he bluntly warned the Israelis Washington would halt all its aid if they did not comply.

The Israeli column used every minute it still had to tighten the ring around the trapped Egyptians. But Kissinger's ultimatum could not be ignored for too long. A United Nations convoy carrying the needed supplies was allowed to pass through the Israeli lines. The trapped force was saved, and Egypt was spared a crushing defeat.

What is instructive about this episode is that it was not the Egyptians who saved their army and it was not Moscow's intervention. It was Kissinger who browbeat the Israelis into denying themselves the rewards of a very bloody war.

It is essential to keep this episode in mind to understand what the present U.S. policy is in the Middle East. Aware of next year's U.S. elections and of the Jewish vote, Kissinger continues to avow his deep concern for Israel. In August, he had signed a number of no-longer secret agreements in which he pledged U.S. military and economic aid.

But it is already clear some of his promises are worth no more than $3 bills. He pledged military aid, but this is being delayed on the excuse that the issue is "under reassessment." It was being reassessed last April. It is still being reassessed.

Kissinger promised Israel to consider its request for the Pershing missile "with a view to giving a positive response." It is hard to believe he did not know that the Pentagon was fiercely opposed to any such transfer. And while there have been hints of U.S. guarantees of Israel's survival, such guarantees are meaningful only if Kissinger expected the Americans to go to war for Israel. As much as anyone, he knows this is wholly unlikely.

The fact is that Israel's survival no longer has top priority in U.S. policy in the Middle East. Cleverly, step by step, Kissinger has changed this traditional posture. In his new designs the vital piece is not Israel but Egypt, which he has now all but split away from Moscow. He has done this, in part, by promising the Egyptians a wide range of delicacies, from dollars to guns. But, in part, he has also achieved it by exacting from Israel the concessions that Egypt could not extract by itself.

Israel might have won the Yom Kippur War (though not its political aftermath) but for the Kissinger ultimatum. It has certainly lost everything else. Its warstrained economy is in dreadful state. As bad, Israel is isolated, with no major allies but the United States.

It must depend on the Americans for economic aid, for oil (now that it is giving up the oil fields it captured from the Egyptians in 1967), for support in the United Nations and, above all, for weapons.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin not long ago described Israel's dependence on the Americans in these words: "The moment that Israel's destiny in anything relating to the defence of its very existence is taken out of its hands, then this becomes a different Israel at the mercy of others."

This, then, is the meaure of Kissinger's achievement. But there is one reservation. Israel must now prepare for the next holy war being preached from every Arab street-corner. The only equalizer it can have is the A-bomb. U.S. intelligence suggests Israel does not yet have a usable nuclear weapon, but sooner or later it will. Thus, what Kissinger's peace may yield is an escalation of the struggle into a nuclear war.

U.S. BECOMES 'MUNITIONS KING OF WORLD'

By RICHARD D. LYONS
New York Times

Emergence of the U.S. as munitions king of the world and almost daily reports of new arms deals with foreign governments are generating a sense of uneasiness among U.S. policy makers and congressmen over impact of the weapons on global affairs.

Sales of the U.S.-made weapons have risen from about $2 billion a year in 1967 to about $11 billion in the last fiscal year, aided by federal policies of liberal credit, a benign attitude toward shipping of arms overseas, the prominent state of U.S. military technology, rapid obsolescence of weapons and an almost limitless world-wide demand for more guns.

Congress has become increasingly embroiled in the specifics of such arms deals as tanks for Turkey, missiles for Jordan, rockets for Israel and jet fighters for Egypt. At the same time Congress is considering the general idea that the Senate and the House of Representatives should have greater control over international shipments of munitions made in the U.S.

During the last decade there has been a complete reversal of U.S. arms policy from one of giving the weapons away to one of selling them, either for spot cash or on liberal credit supplied by the federal government.

Demand for U.S. weapons has been spurred by arms races in the Middle East and the Persian Gulf because of the quadrupling of the price of oil and the desire of the petroleum producing nations to defend their enormously amplified wealth with steel.

Increasingly vocal critics of U.S. arms policy, which some complain is a lack of policy, note the country seems only too willing to sell to all sides.

Over the last generation a dozen nations in conflict have battled one another in central American jungles, Middle East deserts, East Indian islands and Asian plateaus in wars having one common denominator — they were fought with arms made in the U.S.

In thousands of guerrilla actions spanning four continents from Northern Ireland to the Philippines, hordes of people have been killed and maimed by weapons whose production translated to salaries for U.S. workmen and profits for U.S. corporations.

In Asia, Africa and Latin America, military dictatorships have power and keep power with munitions sold, loaned and given away with the endorsement — indeed even the enthusiastic approval — of the last six presidents and 16 Congresses. Since the end of the Second World War, the U.S. has shipped $100 billion worth of weapons to 136 nations, making the country the munitions king of the globe with arms sales equal to those of all the rest of the world.

Virtually no public debate accompanied the increasing flow of U.S.-made armaments throughout the world. Only in the last year have members of Congress begun to express concern over the potential danger lurking in overseas arms sales, even to friendly nations.

Defenders of overseas arms sales say they are necessary to counter Communist threats; that if the U.S. did not provide the weapons, other countries would, and that weapons production translates not only into national security but also profits and jobs.

Among questions raised about arms sales: Are they moral? Will the arms sold trigger wars? Could the arms eventually be used against the U.S.? Should the U.S. seek a treaty with the Soviet Union limiting the supply of conventional arms? Would other nations increase munitions sales if the U.S. chose to curtail shipments? What would be the impact on the U.S. economy if the U.S. drastically reduced foreign arms sales?

The U.S. and the Soviet Union are the world's biggest arms dealers, with the former outselling the latter by a margin of two to one. But France, Britain, China, Italy, Sweden and Canada also make major overseas arms sales.

"Munitions sales is the biggest floating crap game in the world," said one arms specialist in the U.S. state department. "The money involved is enormous and everyone is trying to get a piece of the action."

First They Thump, And Then Listen

STRAY FEATHERS
harold hosford

The lesson for today is The Thump and Listen System For Finding Food.

In the course of this dissertation we will re-visit some acorn-tapping Band-tailed Pigeons, consider the nut-rolling squirrel, ponder some stump-thumping bears, expose the musings of a wood-pile grub-listener and reveal the mysteries of grub-hunting woodpeckers.

And all because of George Black of Sooke.

George dropped me a line last week which was full of news about the birds around his place and, more important, suggesting a possible explanation for something I had seen and written about a couple of weeks ago — acorn-tapping Band-tailed Pigeons.

I'd seen the pigeons feeding in the Garry Oaks next door and wondered why, after gently tapping an acorn, they would reject some while enthusiastically downing others. George suggests that the birds were simply checking the contents before they bought.

Using the Thump and Listen System, the pigeons could hear whether an acorn shell was hollow or round, and firm and fully packed — just by the reply they got from their tap.

Not only does George's suggestion seem to solve the acorn-tapping pigeon problem but it may offer an explanation for the nut-rolling squirrel question as well.

You've probably noticed how squirrels roll a hazel nut over and over in their paws before taking a grip on it with their teeth, or discarding it. Are they playing the Roll and Listen version of the Thump and Listen System? Could be.

But back to George; he thinks bears use the Thump and Listen system when checking stumps and logs for ants.

In George's experience, bears, between the fish runs and berry time, turn to ants in rotting logs and stumps for sustenance — a process involving tearing open the logs and stumps.

And, also from George's experience, bears don't tear open many antless logs, therefore they've got more going for them than just blind luck. Could it be they've got the Thump and Listen system working for them?

George thinks so. He's watched bears approach a likely stump, hit the stump a thump with a burly paw and, almost in the same motion, lower their heads and seem to listen to the stump for the startled rustlings of the ants disturbed by the thump. Only when they hear the movements do the bears begin demolition operations.

George Black's listening bears took me back a few years to my early days in Winnipeg when one of my chores was keeping an almost-insatiable kindling box satisfied; this was, of course, well before stokers and oil burners and other such wonders of the affluent society.

It was my wont, in those days, to spend an hour or two a couple of nights a week communing with the wood-pile in our cellar. Often, during those stints at the block, I would stop and quietly ponder the inequities of life. During a quiet period one night I discovered that I was not alone. That wood pile was full of life; I never saw any of it — except occasionally when my axe accidentally exposed it — but heard it. That Jack Pine and Tamarack had the noisiest complement of wood-boring insects it had ever been my pleasure to meet.

Much later in life, when birdwatching had taken its hold on me, I made the startling discovery — for me — that woodpeckers knew my secret of the wood-pile. Not only that but they had turned the Thump and Listen system to their advantage.

These avian wood borers could certainly hear their insect brethren at work inside a tree but they couldn't see them. As long as the inside boys were moving and chewing, it wasn't too difficult for a woodpecker to draw a bead on them.

If, on the other hand, the grubs slowed down or stopped chewing, a resounding thump by the woodpecker at the right moment might get them going again, and a moving, chewing wood borer is easier to locate and dig out than a silent one.

So endeth the lesson.

"The cost could have gone to the tens of thousands"

Wayne Leys, mechanical superintendent, Construction Aggregates Limited, of Port Coquitlam, is a believer. He knows that Finning's Scientific Wear Analysis (SOS) saved his company thousands of dollars by catching a major problem before it started.

Using their modern equipment, which includes an atomic absorption spectrophotometer to measure metals content in used oil, Finning's expert lab technicians made their scheduled examination of the oil from the lube oil compartment of Construction Aggregates' Cat D8 tractor engine and found an unusually high aluminum content.

Immediately a check was made of the turbocharger, which has an aluminum casing, and the crankshaft with its aluminum main bearing.

The turbocharger was fine, but the crankshaft showed excessive play. The oil pin had pulled off and the truss bearing had failed. The shoulder of the bearing had broken off and was lodged in a drive gear.

"If this truss failure had gone unnoticed and the broken shoulder allowed to cause damage elsewhere, the cost could have gone to the tens of thousands," says Leys. Instead, the estimate for replacing the truss bearing, including parts and labour, was only about two thousand dollars.

"Finding this problem in time cost us about a day's production," Leys observes. "If the problem had been allowed to continue it could have caused us a major overhaul and put the machine out of commission for a week."

Scientific Wear Analysis (SOS) is for you if you handle your company's equipment repair and maintenance. Remember, downtime is lost time. Call Finning today and find out why people in the know, like Wayne Leys, depend on our Scientific Wear Analysis (SOS) to keep their heavy equipment on the job.

Trust Firm Sues to Get $676,032

CALGARY (CP) — Civil court action is being taken by the United Trust Co. to recover $676,032 in connection with a suspected mortgage fraud.

Sixteen statements of claim were filed in Alberta Supreme Court here this week by Alan D. Hunter, United Trust lawyer, in an attempt to recover the money the company alleges was borrowed illegally.

Named in the statements were Jerry Segal, a real estate salesman, and Keith Walters, a mortgage underwriter and appraiser, both former employees of United Trust; James Investments Ltd.; William James Michie, an employee of James Investments; Dale Edwards, a painter; Robert George Michie, Ronald Cammaert and Robert Cannon, teachers; Raymond Falk; William Gary Gompf and William Dorman, real estate salesmen.

Meanwhile, RCMP investigators have begun sifting though documents seized in Toronto and Calgary.

The RCMP commercial crime squad here said United Trust offices and some residences in Calgary and Toronto were searched in an investigation of alleged irregularities in the acquisition of mortgages from the company.

Hunter said United Trust is involved only in taking the appropriate civil action.

United Trust is also claiming $171,000 in damages.

Weekend Nightmare For Hunting Foursome

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Four men went hunting last weekend.

Instead, as one of them puts it, "We ended up living through something worse than hell."

Gunther Heinz of 2928 Fifth Street told his story to the Times because he and his three friends, Ted Vassiliadis of Victoria and Vancouverites Ted Pandelidis and Albert Siozos, have no other way of thanking their rescuers due to the postal strike.

Credited with saving the four men's lives are Ed Ayeon, skipper of the Vancouver-based tug Sea Fox II, first mate Harry Tiesen and two other crew members.

The four men's ordeal began Saturday when they left Nootka Island in Pandelidis's new pleasure craft Bobi to return to Gold River.

That was at 1 p.m. The wind began piping up and soon the storm hit, causing boiling waves and lashing rain.

The men became lost.

"We lost our way and must have taken the wrong channel," Heinz said, "We started into what we thought was the right channel."

HEINZ
. . . 'worse than hell'

Shortly afterward, Bobi's inboard - outboard engine failed.

Heinz described how he and his buddies clung to the sides of the boat to prevent being thrown out as the wind and current began sweeping them toward the open ocean.

The men took down the boat's canvas top to reduce windage. They paddled and bailed, trying to make their way toward, what turned out to be rocky Bligh Island in Nootka Sound.

At times, one or another of the men was swept over the side, but were pulled back.

At about 3:30 p.m. they made it to shore, exhausted, saving only their guns as the boat, including its contents of a motorcycle, a bear they had shot and other items, were bashed on the rocks.

"We kept moving all night long. We didn't dare lie down because we knew it would be all over if we did," Heinz said, "We kept cutting up trees with our knives and gathering bush to keep a fire going. But the rain kept putting it out."

Sunday afternoon the tug Rivtow Lion, with a full tow, passed by the island.

"I fired a shot with my gun and they answered with one blast of their horn," Heinz said, "Then I fired three more shots and they blew their horn three more times."

The Rivtow Lion alerted the Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre at CFB Esquimalt and within two minutes the Tofino coast guard station announced the Sea Fox II would go to the rescue.

NO RIGHT TO DIE IN U.S.

NEWARK, N.J. (UPI) — A 39-year-old who refused life saving medical treatment because she "only wished to die," has no legal right to end her life, a U.S. superior court judge said.

Judge William J. Camarata ruled Friday the woman, Donna Powell, Plainfield, N.J., was mentally incompetent and said her court-appointed guardian could authorize medical treatment.

Mrs. Powell, who is divorced, was under treatment at the addiction services unit of Jersey City Medical Centre, but had denied officials permission to perform exploratory surgery and refused intravenous feedings for five days.

Camarata said the case fell within the jurisdiction of a 1971 decision by the New Jersey Supreme Court, which ruled no one has the "constitutional right to die."

"The solution to this problem sides with life," Camarata said. "It is the state's interest to keep this person alive. We are trying to help her help herself."

GAYS MASS FOR MATLOVICH

WASHINGTON (WP) — "I guess I'm an all-American boy," said Leonard P. Matlovich here the other night. "I don't smoke. I don't drink. And I don't run around with women."

Nearly a thousand people gathered at Pier Nine, a southwest Washington discotheque for homosexuals, roared their approval.

Matlovich is the Bronze Star-winning sergeant who was discharged from the Air Force after declaring himself a homosexual.

As a 12-year veteran with three tours of Vietnam, a Purple Heart and the highest possible efficiency ratings, Matlovich has the kind of conservative image many homosexuals believe is needed if the civil rights of gays are to become a popular cause.

"I think it's our time in history," Matlovich said. "This may be a resurgence of the civil rights movement. The time and the issue have met. It's not me that's the issue."

The occasion was a party to raise funds for Matlovich's legal fees in appealing the discharge. He wants to be reinstated. U.S. District Court Judge Gerhard Gesell refused to block the discharge, but set a Nov. 3 hearing on other aspects of the case.

An estimated $2,500 in cash was raised, along with an undetermined amount in cheques. One cheque for $1,000 was presented by members of the Scorpions Motorcycle Club. Some 10 or 15 of this substratum of the gay community, the so-called "leather people," showed up.

City Councilman Marion Barry spoke and drew a parallel many gay partygoers made. "As a black," said Barry, "I know what it means to be oppressed and catch hell. I know how hard it is just to stand up and be recognized as a person. If I say we have to fight the oppression of all people, I have to come down here and show that I mean it." Representatives of Sen. Alan Cranston (Dem-Calif.) and gay activist groups also attended the party.

Matlovich spoke with tears in his eyes. "How do you say thank you?" he asked.

"Thank you!" shouted members of the crowd.

"I haven't always been proud of being gay," Matlovich said.

"I went through a period of my life where I spent many hours crying and praying I would change. I thought being gay meant wearing dresses. Four years ago, if a gay person worked for me I would have gone out of my way to get rid of him for fear of my own situation."

Matlovich, who was a human relations instructor in the Air Force, wound up saying, "One day we, too, will be able to say, 'My country, 'tis of thee sweet land of liberty.' You're all shining stars. Be a little prouder of who you are."

News photographers were banned from Pier Nine for fear some partygoers, still publicity shy, would object. The reaction of the mostly male crowd to a reporter was forthright and friendly. "Does it offend you to see men kissing each other?" someone asked. It seemed as innocuous as any social kissing. It is also a badge of comradeship, and most of the partygoers didn't make a big issue of it. A kiss goes with a handshake.

Michael Greer, a homosexual actor ("Fortune and Men's Eyes," Laugh-In), entertained the crowd. "It's good to see so many of you come out tonight," he said, getting a huge laugh. "I'm delighted to be in Washington, A.C. Especially during the BI-centennial.

Lunch Pail Attack Scares Bear

YORK, Neb. (UPI) — A former York resident pounded an Alaskan brown bear on the head with a lunch pail and scared it off after it picked up his wife, he told members of his family Friday.

James Carlson, 27, said he and his wife, Julie, 26, were walking to their pickup truck at a pipeline terminal near Valdez, Alaska, Wednesday when the bear charged them.

Carlson said he was knocked down and the animal picked up his wife and started off. He said he screamed at the bear and struck it on the head with the pail. This, he said, frightened the bear, which then let go of Mrs. Carlson and ran off.

Carlson said his wife required more than 40 stitches on her back and suffered a crushed leg.

Gov't Woods Cash Demanded

More forestry revenue should be plowed back in reforestation and land management, Robert Lasser of the Canadian Institute of Forestry, Pacific Section, told the Pearse Royal Commission on Forest Resources Friday.

There is a backlog of 3 million acres to be stocked with trees in the province, he noted.

"I remember 41 years ago it was cut, cut and cut — we have an unlimited supply of trees," he said. "We know this is not the case today."

Lasser observed that succesive governments have taken most of the revenue derived from the forest, leaving little to take care of its need.

"I guess we are to blame," he added. "We elected them."

"Unlike the farmer who reseeds his land, we extract and put nothing back," he said.

He noted that all other provincial governments return forestry revenue to the forest.

"We must see that current logging areas are restocked in the shortest possible time, based on site-specific needs," he said.

He noted wood is a renewable resource and as world demand for wood fibre increases, B.C.'s role as a major supplier will become even more important.

What concerned Lasser was that B.C. is now harvesting a crop of mature trees which were not planted by man. When this stock is gone—what then?

What people didn't understand, he said, was that reforestation involved more than just planting seedlings.

Like a farm crop, new plantations have to be weeded, thinned and protected from natural hazards. But the problem is that there is not sufficient funds to carry out this work, he said.

Industrial Forester Ted Mattice, also representing the institute, said there was a need for more research to improve forest management practices.

"There is more damage to soil sites today than there was 40 years ago, because of roads and equipment," he said.

He said logging road construction had improved, in answer to a question from commission chairman Dr. Peter Pearse.

The association recommended that a governing body be responsible for the over-all management of B.C.'s forest resources. The group would include people of all disciplines, such as wildlife and fisheries experts.

Jack Lowry, business manager for the Western Guides and Outfitters Association and B.C. Registered Trappers Association, said the fish and wildlife branch should speak with authority equal to that of other government departments during the planning stages.

To avoid injustice, he said, some sort of government policy should be established to determine the responsibility and to set standards of compensation when one important resource is allowed to be harvested to the detriment of another.

He observed people suffer when a resource is wiped out by a user of another resource.

The hearing has been adjourned until Wednesday.

RESERVOIR USE EYED BY GROUP

A special study group has been set up by the government to examine the possibility of wider public use of the reservoir behind the Hugh Keenleyside Dam on the Arrow Lakes.

Several government departments will work with B.C. Hydro officials on the study to determine if the operation of the area could be changed to improve its use for recreational, navigational and environmental purposes.

The reservoir is operated principally to produce flood-control and hydro-electric power benefits but Resources Minister Bob Williams said he feels other public use aspects of the lakes are important enough to justify the study.

When Work's No More The Reason for Life

Retirement is the time to do everything one wanted to do but never had the time, says the author of How to Survive Retirement in Canada.

Henry Hunnisett was in Victoria earlier this week to promote his book.

A former Toronto businessman, Hunnisett was forced by ill-health into retirement four years ago at age 57.

"My work had been my life up till then," he said during an interview.

"I really didn't know what to do with myself . . . my retirement was unexpected and I was unprepared for it."

Hunnisett said he went to the library to find a book to help him through the adjustment period.

"But all that I could find were U.S. books dealing with retirement there."

His book was published in March of this year.

One problem for retired people is filling in their days, he said.

His advice is to keep busy taking up hobbies, volunteer work and making new friends.

For those about to retire, Hunnisett advises that new interests he developed outside work and plans be made for retirement.

"Being prepared is the key," he says.

Hunnisett's book also deals with estimating retirement income, cost of living in retirement, how to increase your retirement income, inflation and the retired and even a chapter on how to handle idle husbands.

Colleges Told Of Ceilings

Some community colleges in B.C. are projecting budget increases next year of 70 per cent over last year, Education Minister Eileen Dailly said Friday.

The minister will call college representatives to Victoria next Friday and inform them that ceilings will be placed on budget increases.

"I believe that, in the light of the current economic climate it is absolutely essential that I inform the colleges and B.C.I.T. (British Columbia Institute of Technology) on the ceilings that will be established with regard to budgets in the forthcoming year," she said.

Dailly called the colleges to Victoria in July and told them restraint would have to be shown in preparing next year's budgets but it appears the warnings were not taken to heart she said.

"It is evident that in some cases the message did not get through and I find that I now have no alternative but to present budget guidelines."

The minister said she still supports the concept of local autonomy for colleges but as the person ultimaately responsible for all education expenditures she would be derelict in not giving guidelines.

She made no mention of the federal anti-inflation program or its effects on the college budgets and salaries.

In the last three years community college budgets have increased 112 per cent, she said.

Victim Named

DELTA (CP) — Police Friday identified the man who fell from a public works dredge Thursday as John Mayno Eals, 50, of New Westminster. He was missing and presumed drowned after falling from a dredge in the Fraser River.

Caron Gets His Answer

MONTREAL (CP) — After a drawn-out series of court actions, Paul-Emile Caron, mayor of Louiseville, Que., has been granted possession of the controversial ship Answer.

The ship first gained prominence last February when Captain Brian Erb sail Answer out of Quebec City harbor and led RCMP officers on an 11-day chase around the Gulf of St. Lawrence, ending with Captain Erb and his 21-member crew being taken into custody.

Since that time, the 328-foot ship has been at anchor at the mouth of the Loup River where it flows into the St. Lawrence, 50 miles northeast of here, while legal battles ensued over its ownership.

Judges Louis Pratte, Gerald Ledain and Miller Hyde of Provincial Court of Appeal rejected an appeal Thursday by Vitral Compania Naviera S.A. of Panama against a March 6, 1975, judgment which awarded Caron temporary possession of the vessel.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A man who stole a scanning monitor then adjusted it to pick up police frequencies was sentenced in Victoria provincial court Friday to three months in jail by Judge Harold Alder.

Robert Ernest Landry, 29, of 1462 Fort pleaded guilty to theft under $200 for stealing the $169 monitor from Hygrade Radio, 815 View, about Oct. 14.

Police said crystals in the monitor had been changed so it could receive all police radio bands. They arrested Landry Tuesday.

Two men who ate $17.60 worth of food at the Melrose Cafe, 622 Yates, then ran out without paying pleaded guilty to obtaining food by fraud and were sentenced to three days in jail.

Randy William Sargent, 26, and Jonathan Anthony Skobin, 22, both of no fixed address, told Judge Alder they had been drinking heavily and smoking pot at local bars before the incident early Friday. They then found the door of the youth hostel where they were staying had been locked for the night.

"I wanted to balance the anguish and pain of the experience by filling my stomach," said Sargent.

"What about the pain and anguish of the restaurant owner?" asked Alder.

He sentenced them to three days in jail and said they could have meals there. Both men have criminal records.

They were caught in the 1300-block Government by the cook and another employee after eating two top sirloin steaks, two omelettes, two beer, one milkshake, a large coke and two pieces of pie.

A 28-year-old man was ordered held in custody until trial Nov.5 when he pleaded not guilty to theft over $200.

Richard Wayne Duncan was charged after police said a man stole $264 from four persons in Saanich Oct. 8.

Duncan is currently on probation and awaiting trial on an Oct. 1 fraud charge, the prosecutor told Judge Alder.

"We must consider both society and the accused, and it wouldn't be fair to either if I didn't make a detention order," said the judge.

A request for a discharge was denied when an armed forces corporal pleaded guilty to assault causing bodily harm.

Vincent Jones, 252 Gorge, was fined $100 and put on six months probation after voluntarily giving sworn evidence about the incident Sept. 20.

"He merely wants the chance to put some flesh on the skeleton my learned friend will give," said defence counsel Clive Rippon referring to circumstances normally read to court by the Crown.

The evidence concerning provocation for the assault didn't bring Jones a discharge though Rippon said he has an unblemished conduct record for 12 years in the armed forces.

A man who told Judge Alder his life is in danger from Port Alberni RCMP was remanded to preliminary hearing there Oct. 31.

Donald Edward Turner of Port Alberni was charged with assaulting a peace officer in that municipality Sept. 21.

He told the court he needs protection from RCMP officers who want to shoot him in the back.

"I'm in a feud with the cops there. There's 65 of them and only one of me," said Turner.

Judge Alder denied his request.

Margaret Laurel McLeod, 18, Fisgard Apartments, received a suspended sentence and two years probation for possession of hashish.

She was arrested Sept. 2 in a Broad street alley with a hashish pipe.

Brian Hutchison, 21, of 5045 Lochside, was fined $100 for three counts of traffic violations.

He pleaded guilty to failing to remain at an accident and was found guilty of misuse of licence plates and driving without insurance. He was put on six months probation.

Fines for impaired driving were given to Vernon Joseph McIntyre, 22, of Cobble Hill, $400 and no driving for a month; Leonard James Woods, 20, of 50 Marler, $350; and Jan Vanderven, 64, of 2841 Shelbourne, $350.

In county court, William George Goetken, 32, of 707 Esquimalt, was sentenced to one year in jail for being unlawfully in a James Bay apartment March 31.

Judge Montague Drake told Goetken, found guilty earlier this month by a jury, that he was taking into account seven months spent in jail awaiting trial.

Defence counsel Doug Christie said time spent in custody was adequate punishment but prosecutor Barry Mah Ming said Goetken has a criminal record and the offence occurred while he was on probation.

Pair Found Guilty of Arson in Church Blaze

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

Two men were found guilty late Friday night by a county court jury of arson in the fire a year ago which gutted the Jehovah's Witnesses Kingdom Hall on Joan Crescent.

John Robert Atkinson of Vancouver and Terry Darrow Emerson, 1195 Trans-Canada Highway, will be sentenced by Judge Peter Millward Nov. 25. Maximum sentence is 14 years.

The Crown consented to a defence request that Atkinson and Emerson remain at large until sentence.

The jury retired at 4 p.m. but returned at 5.30 p.m. to hear one part of testimony by Frank Cope and listen to a reading of much of the evidence of Raymond Kapfer.

Cope told court Emerson and Atkinson (and a man named Ray picked him up at work about 10:30 p.m. Oct. 13, 1974, and they drove around and saw a fire at Kingdom Hall on Joan Crescent.

After looking at the fire, he said "someone said 'I lit the fire'" but Cope said he couldn't remember who said it. "I didn't pay much attention," he said.

Kapfer's story was that Atkinson and Emerson picked him up in a car and said they intended to burn the hall. He said the other two set fire to the hall while he sat in the car.

The defence had suggested that Kapfer, the key Crown witness, was involved as an accomplice, not with the accused, but with two other persons.

Prosecutor David Lisson told the jury in his summation that the cross-examination of Kapfer weakened his evidence and "you may well already have a negative impression."

He pointed to the evidence of Alfred Seinen, who was leaving his son's apartment opposite Kingdom Hall and saw two young men of small stature running from the hall's driveway, getting into a slow-moving car and speeding off. Seconds later there was an explosion and fire.

He asked the jury: can there be any reasonable doubt that Atkinson and Emerson were criminally involved in the fire. Kapfer's role, "whatever it may have been," was a separate matter.

Emerson's lawyer Doug Christie said Kapfer left home over religious disagreements with his father, a Jehovah's Witness, and suggested that gave him a motive for burning the hall which "I suggest he did by himself."

Christie called Kapfer "a very clever liar" who continually evaded questions.

Finally, he suggested Kapfer drove the car at the scene of the fire but he was with two persons other than the accused because he met the accused downtown after the fire.

Report Misfiled, Youth Goes Free

A clerical error — the misfiling of a case summary report — has resulted in dismissal of three charges including armed robbery against a city youth.

Ronald Edward Drewitt, 18, of 631 Hillside, appeared in court Wednesday when Prosecutor Nick Lang told Judge Harold Alder the year-old charges of theft, armed robbery and possession of stolen property should be withdrawn for lack of evidence because no Crown witnesses were available.

"There are no subpoenas on file. I presume it was impossible to serve those witnesses," said Lang.

"I'm rather surprised at the Crown in this matter," said Judge Alder. "These are serious matters, and the man has been held in custody."

Drewitt had been jailed since Sept. 19 when arrested on a warrant after failing to appear for the trial reset for July.

Dismissal of the charges scuttled more than a month's work by Colwood RCMP.

Police allege the accused and an unidentified man known only as John robbed two men of cash and a car near Thetis Lake.

The vehicle was recovered near the Johnson Street bridge Aug. 11 and Drewitt was arrested Aug. 12.

Having elected trial by magistrate, he was scheduled for trial Feb. 20, 1975, but changed counsel at that time and applied for adjournment, the prosecutor said.

Both police and civilian witnesses had been summonsed and were prepared to appear.

When Drewitt failed to show for a new trial date in July, a warrant was issued for his arrest, said Lang.

In court, the prosecutor found no witnesses available and felt he must abandon the case, he said.

The problem — a misfile of the accused's case summary report — stemmed from initiation of a new system in Victoria provincial court that will ultimately prevent such occurrences, said Tim Chatton, deputy director of the witness management program for the attorney-general's department.

Chatton is handling witness management in provincial court while the system gets off the ground.

"It was really nobody's fault, but because I'm in this position I'm responsible," he said. "I didn;t know the case existed."

"It boils down to a lack of understanding between the new system and the old."

The new system, being tested in Victoria for use all over B.C., said Chatton, ensures cases don't "get lost" again because case summary reports are standardized and written in quadruplicate.

"This is a damn good system. It would be the most modern way yet to handle witnesses," said Cahtton.

But reports from the old system still exist — without adequate duplicates — and Drewitt's simply got filed incorrectly, he said.

He hadn't heard about the case until it was dismissed, he said.

Interest to Drop

HARRISON HOT SPRINGS (CP) — Myron Sambad of Prince George, newly-elected chairman of the British Columbia Construction Association, said Friday members are uncertain about the federal wage and price controls but if they work, interest rates will come down and that might generate more confidence in the construction industry.

When Gov't Deals with Insects It's a Real Hush-Hush Business

Mystery surrounds a conference held in Victoria this week of government entomologists — those people who spend their lives studying insects.

More than 100 advisors and experts from across Canada, mainly from the four western provinces, atended the three and-a-half day get-together at the Provincial Museum. The topics were apparently wide-ranging though dealt heavily on what pest control measures the various provinces were implementing.

It was a hush-hush affair. Meetings were conducted behind closed doors. The public wasn't invited.

Even the head of the entomology department at UVic wasn't advised. Dr. Richard Ring said he was surprised he hadn't been notified.

"It's the first time I've heard of it," he said when contacted after the conference ended.

He felt certain topics discussed at the meetings would have been helpful to him in teaching his course on economic entomology. part of which deals with pests and pest control.

"I'm quite surprised as I had the provincial entomologist in my office last week and he didn't mention it and the week before had one of the assistant entomologists up and he didn't mention it either.

"It mystifies me completely."

The conference involving meetings of three groups — the Canadian Association of Pesticide Control Officials, the Western Committee on Crop Pests, and the Western Committee on Livestock Pests — was hosted by the provincial department of agriculture and sponsored under the auspices of the federal Canadian Agriculture Services Co-ordinating Committee.

Sig Peterson, B.C. deputy minister of agriculture, said he was unaware the meetings were held in camera and was also not aware of the agenda which would give the scientists reason to keep their meetings closed. He said he did not attend.

He presumed that as the topics touched on sensitive issues such as use of pesticides and control of disease-carrying insects, public involvement may have impeded "desirable progress."

"If somebody jumps the gun and gets the public involved before a decision or policy has been gelled . . . then retrogression sets in."

He felt the scientists would have been stymied and their discussions effectively brought to a halt if the public had attended.

Peterson said he left such matters entirely up to the experts, in this case, provincial entomologist Dr. Glen Neilson.

Neilson declined to comment on specific issues discussed other than to say the talks were wide-ranging and dealt with everything from the problem of army worms attacking rape crops to the control of vectors of encephalitis.

He said the meetings concluded with more than 75 pages of recommendations "or the guidance of the scientists."

He defended the closed-meeting approach by saying that one of the primary aims of the meetings was to integrate the various provincial legislations concerning pests and pest control measures.

He said an example might be the sale of a particular type of pesticide — how it should be sold, how regulated, what requirements should be placed on its use, etcetera.

He noted the final say would still have to go to the federal government for incorporation into the Pest Control Products Act, at which time it would be made public.

Neilson said the three groups meet annually and that as far as he knew they've always been held in closed session.

Next year the Western Committees on Crop and Livestock Pests will meet in Saskatoon, while the Canadian Association of Pesticide Control Officials will meet in Ottawa.

Creative Thinking Lecture

De Bono is founding director of the Cognitive Research Trust at Cambridge, currently moving towards the establishment of thinking as a curriculum subject in schools.

Internal Museum Hassle

Another internal hassle appears to be bubbling at the Provincial Museum and while officials are once again keeping mum, this one involved an alleged health hazard from asbestos.

For the second time this year the Times has received an anonymous letter using museum stationery and this one says:

"About half of the provincial museum staff will walk off their jobs next week because of an unsafe building . . . There will be an effort to cover this up."

Calls to museum director York Edwards Friday went unanswered and other officials contacted remained tight-lipped.

But sources described this situation:

When the museum and nearby curatorial tower were built about eight years ago, steel beams were sprayed with abestos to serve as a fire retardant.

A few years later asbestos received increasing publicity as a health hazard, related to the lung disease silicosis and possibly other maladies.

The asbestos on the steel beams is described as a grey fibrous material which flakes and falls off when bumped and following the adverse reports, some of the museum staff are reported to have become concerned.

The buildings have air-conditioning systems and there were fears that floating asbestos fibres were being recirculated. The effectiveness of air filters in the conditioning systems was questioned.

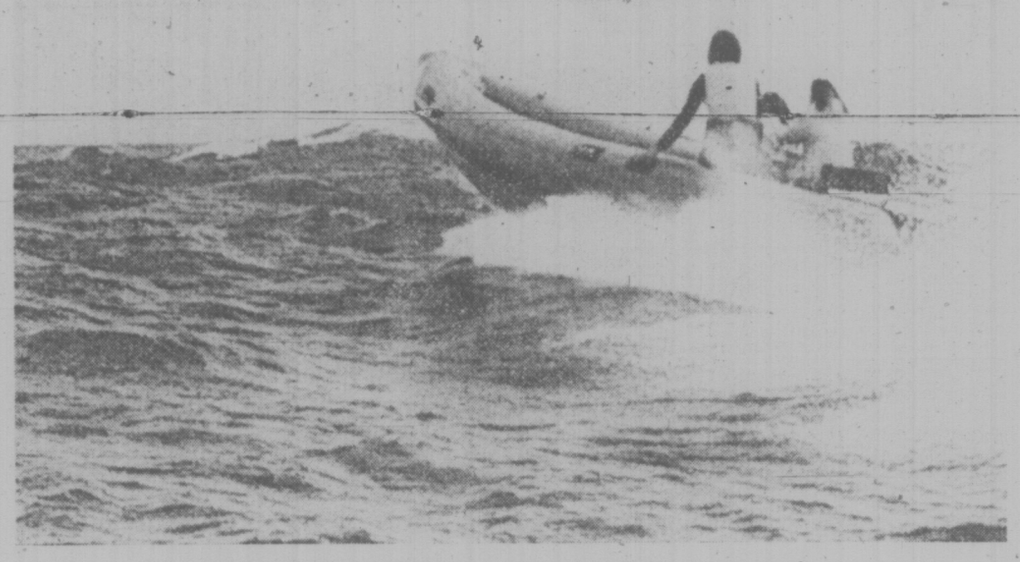
One source said the public works department was called in to conduct tests and these revealed insignificant particulate matter in the air. But the validity of the testing method was challenged by at least one staff member.

Any problem could be solved by spraying the asbestos-coated beams with a sealer but a source suggested the public works department had been "dragging its feet" in taking this step.

The job would have been much easier a few years ago when much less space had been developed but it is still practical, he said.

An estimated 100 people work in the curatorial tower.

The earlier letter to the Times, which claimed to represent the museum staff, complained about the "carnival atmosphere" developing in and around the museum and cited a lottery booth, stage, outdoor tables and soft drink machines as contributing to the "clutter."



Rescue boat heads out into the Strait on patrol

New Watch on Strait

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

A new marine rescue service goes into operation on Monday, providing a round-the-clock watch on the treacherous waters between Sooke Basin and Oak Bay Marina.

Providing that much-needed service are 36 students belonging to the Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific's sea rescue unit.

The unit is headed by Alejandro Bolz, 18 of Uruguay, who reports:

"We'll be concentrating on the main sport fishing areas and Race Rocks, which can be pretty dicey at times."

The unit has two 20-foot rescue boats, capable of 40 knots, made by students at the college.

The fiberglass-hulled boats, topped with inflatable tubes to ease the task of hauling victims inboard, were designed by retired British admiral Desmond Hoare.

Jim Moo-Young of Jamaica, 18, is in charge of one boat. Captain of the other is Edmundo Vianello, 18, of Venezuela.

"There'll be a watch of students on standby every minute of the night and day," Jim said. "And, there'll be a daily patrol of our area an hour before dusk."

The college at Pedder Bay will run its sea rescue unit on much the same lines as the one in Wales where Atlantic College students have earned an international reputation for their efficiency and enthusiasm.

Geared for every emergency, Alejandro explained the unit, composed of 26 boys and 10 girls, is well-trained.

Each member must have a Royal Life Saving Society bronze medallion, for swimming and lifesaving capability, a St. John Ambulance first-aid certificate, besides being competent in boat handling, building and maintenance; basic mechanics, engine maintenance, electricity, coastal navigation and radio operation.

In addition, six unit members are qualified divers, capable of rescuing a victim trapped beneath a capsized boat.

The college, which has 200 students from 40 countries around the world, can be immediately contacted by both Canadian and American coast guard stations as well as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in an emergency.

Three VHF (very high frequency) radio sets — one at the college's radio headquarters and the others in the boats—ensure complete monitoring in an emergency.

Each boat is equipped with all necessary rescue gear, including exposure bags.

Alejandro and his two captains explained that these are strong plastic bags, large enough to contain a victim suffering from exposure and a member of the rescue boat's crew.

"The student would strip down and use his own body heat, if necessary to help warm the victim," Alejandro said.

Canada's west coast has the unenviable reputation of having the highest total of marine incidents in Canada.

In 1974, the Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre at CFB Esquimalt handled 1,679 marine incidents. Already this year, that number has increased to 1,727.

A rescue centre spokesman today welcomed the college's new service.

"We handle 50 per cent of all marine incidents in Canada," he said, "And a well-disciplined unit like this is a welcome addition."

Crime-Police Ratio Short 45% in Victoria

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Another 50 to 55 officers would be needed in the Victoria city police department if it adopted guidelines suggested by the B.C. Police Commission, an arbitration hearing was told Friday.

Vancouver deputy police chief Bob Stewart, a witness at the arbitration proceedings which will result in a binding contract settlement on the city and its police force, is an executive member of the recently-formed commission.

He told arbitrator Guy Barclay the commission's suggested 'yardstick for gauging the strength of municipal police forces is the ratio of police officers to criminal offences in the community concerned.

On this basis, he said, Victoria's actual strength should be increased by as least another 50 officers, or about 15 per cent.

Earlier testimony in the hearing at the Empress Hotel said the city police department's "authorized strength" last year was 130 officers, but it was actually seven below that number and had suffered a manpower deficiency for several years.

Claims of under-policing, the risks this poses for the community and the resultant damage to police morale were some of the key arguments presented by the Victoria Policemen's Union on the first two days of the hearing, which continues next week.

The union is represented by Victoria lawyer Dermod Owen-Flood and the city by Vancouver lawyer Jack Giles.

Stewart said in Vancouver the ratio is 21 officers per 1,000 Criminal Code offences, whereas Victoria's ratio is only 12.

He said in making an analysis of the manpower capability of all police forces in the province, the B.C. Police Commission did find that Victoria's was inadequate. The only other area of the province "regularly" behind strength" was the city of Nelson.

A possible danger in this situation, Stewart noted, is that when law enforcement is stepped up in one area, crime tends to "blossom forth" in another when policing is less diligent.

"It is significant that when an all-out thrust was made against organized crime on the Lower Mainland by CLUE (the Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit) very soon it became necessary . . . to establish an arm of that unit on Vancouver Island; which indicates to me that criminal activity had in fact spread out and is now centring in other urban areas such as Victoria."

Asked by the police counsel if Victoria was acquiring some of the "hallmarks" of big-city crime, Stewart said problems similar to Vancouver's are becoming evident here, but on a smaller scale because the city itself is smaller.

Stewart said he believes all municipal police forces in B.C. should have standard contracts governing pay and working conditions, but under cross-examination by Giles said the official position of the police commission is that federal and provincial subsidies should be forthcoming to make this possible.

He agreed that at present municipalities can't really afford the police forces they need, but said in the absence of subsidies that was a "hard fact of life" which must be accepted.

Giles claimed it was illogical to argue on the one hand that senior government subsidies are needed to achieve inter-force parity, but on the other that municipalities must meet arbitrary standards on police force strength regardless of the cost to the taxpayer.

He also challenged the rationale of the officers-per-crime-rate formula, describing it as "unreliable and misleading" because only 25 per cent of the police officer's time is occupied by crime-related tasks.

Stewart replied that in the police commission's opinion it was a more realistic base for determining manpower needs than the traditional formula relating the number of police officers to the community's population.

Failure to recognize this earlier, he said, had resulted in the present situation where the average British Columbian runs a greater risk of becoming a crime victim than the citizen of any other province.

The city's case is scheduled to be presented next week.

Firm Pledges Pitch Stop

Two Victoria men have received more than $500 in compensation from a local automobile transmission company after complaining about the firm's business practices.

Lo-Cost Automatic Transmission Rebuilders Ltd. signed an agreeement with B.C.'s director of trade practices pledging not to repeat certain sales practices and agreeing to pay compensation to three consumers, including the two Victorians.

Among the sales practices complained of are:

—Advertising free inspections or free diagnosis when the sole purpose of such ads was not to provide such a service but to attract consumers;

—The use of a sales technique involving demonstration of metal particles, originating or purporting to originate from the oil or fulid in the transmission of the consumer's automobile "in an attempt to persuade the consumer that this indicated serious and abnormal wear when this was not the case;"

—Dismantling of a transmission of a consumer's auto when unnecessary or when necessary, the charging of an unnecessarily high fee;

—The performance or purported performance of work on the transmission of a consumer's automobile when such work was either not specifically authorized or was the subject of specific instructions that the work was not to be performed;

Those practices were listed in the agreement, known as an Assurance of Voluntary Compliance (AVC), which is a relatively new form of consumer action under the B.C. Trade Practices Act.

In the AVC, the government director has reasonable grounds to suspect the company of contravening consumer laws but the company does not acknowledge or admit to breaking the law.

Instead the company simply undertakes not to practice the listed sales techniques and also to reimburse and compensate the consumers who originally lodged the complaint.

Dr. Winston Nykodym of Victoria will be reimbursed $199.27 for the amount he paid to the company over and above the amount owing for authorized work and $77.45 for the cost of repairing a leak from the transmission following return of the car from the company.

Nykodym will also receive $100 as compensation for his inconvenience and deprivation of the use of his automobile.

Rodney Gittens will receive a reimbursement of $80.73 and a compensation for inconvenience of $100.

Lo-Cost also agreed to release Gittens from any indebtedness allegedly owing the company and to release any liens against the car.

The company must pay the consumer director $49 for the costs of the government's investigation into the matter, and must be willing to give a report to the director on its compliance with the act any time up until January 1, 1977.

VIPs Upstaged At Rec. Centre

Stuffy it wasn't.

Somewhat smug Oak Bay, with its reputation for doing things with delicate refinement and correctness, threw a surprise when it officially opened its new recreation centre Friday night.

The politicians and other VIPs were out in number, of course, but they were upstaged by the children.

High school students played music, minor hockey players showed how they get into shape, young curlers did their stuff and scores of youngsters tried out the swimming pool.

On ice, young figure skaters showed promise of things to come.

Premier Dave Barrett opened the centre, urging people not to be overawed by the plush furnishings to the point that youngsters stepping out of line on the odd occasion would be banished.

"Keep them (problem children), love them and nurture them," he said.

Mayor Brian Smith and Ken Hurn, chairman of Oak Bay's parks and recreation commission, clad in unconventional swim attire, cavorted in the pool for the spectators' enjoyment.

Today and Sunday, the centre will be open for general viewing, hundreds of school children having been given free passes for swimming and skating.

The centre, 20 years in the planning, contains a 25-metre pool, ice rink, six sheets of curling ice, a jet whirlpool, two saunas and a social lounge with full kitchen and catering facilities.

Police Probe Promoter

A music promoter whose business dealings in Victoria last summer are the subject of a police investigation has been charged with eight counts of defrauding $10,472.60 from merchants in the Vernon area.

Donald Mike Porter, 43, appeared in Vernon provincial court Friday and was remanded to Oct. 30 to obtain legal counsel.

Judge Jurgen Behnckie set bail at $3,000 with one or two sureties. A condition of the bail is the accused must stay at his brother's home in Salmon Arm from 9 p.m. to 7:30 a.m. each day.

Porter, who was arrested by RCMP in Kamloops earlier this week on the Vernon charges is also wanted for questioning in connection with the cancellation of the Billy Grammer show in Victoria Aug. 22 and in Vancouver Aug. 23.

Porter's firm, Don Jack Productions was promoting the show across Alberta and B.C.

The British Columbia Wheelchair Sports and Recreation Association had agreed to sponsor it here and in Vancouver and provide an office and telephones in exchange for 25 per cent of all profits.

The sudden cancellation of the show aroused the interest of Victoria Better Business Bureau manager Bill Tindall.

Tindall said a number of local businessmen had bought ads in the show's program but the program was never distributed the night of the show.

He also said six telephone solicitors hired to sell program ads had never been paid. Some of the six have since filed complaints with the department of labor, Tindall said.

A Victoria police spokesman said the case is still under investigation.

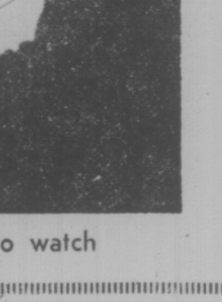
MAYOR'S RACE LIST GROWS

Joe Richards of 541 Dalton is the latest candidate to enter the Victoria aldermanic race.

Richards, who filed papers Friday afternoon, describes himself as "the working man's candidate".

He wants city council increased to 10, two aldermen-at-large and eight elected by aldermanic districts (wards) for more equal representation.

It's Sad, Frustrating When Dog Has to Go



So sad, that little front-page story in Thursday's Vancouver Province on Mr. Mac and Ticky.

I guess it was a combination of reporter Tony Eberts' heartrending prose and photographer Dave Paterson's appealing picture of Ticky, but I felt my eyes moistening and I thought again of Yogi Bear.

If you didn't read the story, it told of how Mr. Mac, a 65-year-old widower with a heart condition (he didn't want his real name known in case he was a burden on his friends) had to part with his little dog.

Mr. Mac had promised his late wife he would always care for Ticky — a six-year-old, 18-pound, mostly-pomeranian mutt.

But, because the seedy little basement suite he now occupies has no plumbing and his doctor says he must stop climbing stairs, Mr. Mac has to move as soon as possible.

The agencies of the Vancouver Resources Board are trying to find him accommodation that he can afford on his fixed income ($240 a month) and chances are good that they will succeed. The catch, though — and for Mr. Mac it's a heart-breaking one — is that none of the subsidized housing likely to be available under the B.C. Housing Management Commission will allow tenants to keep pets.

And so on Wednesday, though his doctor would like him to keep his pet as the walks they went on together gave the old man the moderate exercise his heart needs, Mr. Mac parted with Ticky.

He was sad, frustrated and confused.

"I am not so old or sick that I cannot look after myself and Ticky," he said. "But they tell me there is no place for us, together. I would pay most of my money for such a place. I would go hungry to pay for it, yet they tell me the rents are too high and places to live in are too few, so nobody has to take people with pets. Not even very small, very quiet dogs . . ."

As reported Eberts says, "Anyone who has experienced the bond of affection between human and canine knows what a wrench it is to give up a dog." And I'm sure that many who read this have known that sadness at some time or other.

We knew it once, my wife and I, when we had to part with Yogi Bear, our tiny, very mixed-up dog we adopted in Iran.

Yogi was a strange little thing: a blend of many unknown breeds which together produced what was more like a small white fox than a dog.

Now I don't particularly like small yappy dogs, but when we first met Yogi he was living a rather precarious life with a large group of young people who were hitching their way around the world and just stopping over in Iran. Yogi wasn't happy there and he tried running away once but he was only about eight inches from the ground and had a rough three days fending for himself.

A couple of the young people were proof readers on Kayhan International, where I worked, and when we went to their place one night for dinner they were all talking about moving on. And, when they realized my wife was soft-hearted, they said they were going to have Yogi shot the next day.

That did it.

We took him home with us and very gradually he got over his fear and got to like living with people. In fact, he got to like it so much that we always felt he would much rather have been a person than a dog.

When it was time for us to leave Tehran, we were in a quandary. We knew no foreigners living there who would like to have Yogi and Iranians don't like dogs much.

There was nothing else for it — we would have to take him with us.

So, despite great misgivings and great expense, we sent Yogi Bear on ahead of us to England where he had to stay in quarantine for six months.

That, alas, proved the undoing of all our care and affection. Eight-inch Yogi, who hated all dogs (even those his own size) was put in a wire cage between two of the most monstrous things I have ever seen — a great dane and a shaggy-legged Borzoi — and he was terrified.

Although we visited him during the six months, it didn't do any good. When he came out he decided that, not only did he not like dogs, he no longer cared much for people, either.

To get his point across, he first bit my mother on the ankle while she was visiting us, and systematically bit every other human ankle he could find in the apartment building in which we lived.

The vet said that because of his background he would probably never get over it. We tried a muzzle for a while but as soon as it was taken off, he was back looking for ankles again. By now, we had decided to emigrate to Canada and, as Yogi had even turned on us and wouldn't let us in our bedroom without a bite or two, we knew we couldn't take him.

A kind lady at the RSPCA said they would try to find him a home. But we knew no one would want him and he would be destroyed. And it was sad.

As Mr. Mac found out, the dog is sad, too.

Ticky is so good, he says, "but last night she moaned all night, because she knew I was sad and she knew what was happening today."

And when we packed up Yogi's things and took him upstairs on a double-decker bus out in the country to the RSPCA, he wouldn't look at us. And, when we handed him over, we were certain we could see tears in his eyes.

That was sad, all right. But it was a long time ago and we have been able to have other dogs since.

But for a lonely old man, a dog can be everything. For Mr. Mac, losing Ticky is the end.

NFL'S HANDS-OFF POLICY PUTS CFL FIRST IN LINE

By The Canadian Press

Canadian Football League teams are getting first crack at players thrown out of work by the demise of the World Football League.

Shortly after the National Football League announced a hands-off policy on WFL players, CFL president Jake Gaudaur said teams from his league are free to sign anybody from the dead league who is a free agent.

NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle ruled that WFL players would not be allowed to switch to his league this year.

His ruling came after the league received a telegram from lawyers for owner John F. Bassett of Memphis Southmen of the WFL threatening the NFL with an anti-trust suit if it allows its teams to sign any players from the defunct league.

However, Gaudaur said he had received no comparable threat from the WFL and does not plan to impose any signing ban.

CFL rules allow teams to add players to their rosters at any time, providing they can make room for them. In addition, Canadian teams can sign players for next season, something NFL teams aren't allowed to do even under normal circumstances.

Star running back Anthony Davis, who met with Toronto Argonaut officials Friday, apparently becomes a free agent when Southern California Sun fails to take the field for its Sunday game.

Bill Hodgson, owner of the CFL team, said his Argonauts have checked out Davis's contract "and there is no doubt in our mind that Davis will be a free agent after Sunday."

Hodgson, managing director John Barrow and director of player personnel J. I. Albrecht of the Argonauts met with Davis and his agent, Mike Trope.

Trope said in an interview Davis's contract contains a clause which frees him from his contract on the first day the Sun fails to play a scheduled game.

Davis was leading the WFL in rushing, scoring and pass receptions when the league folded earlier this week.

The Argonauts made an offer that Trope said "everybody is happy with" but the agent said Davis is not likely to sign with anybody until he's had a chance to talk with New York Jets, who own his NFL rights.

Under Rozelle's ruling that can't be until next season.

Offer of $400,000 For Bruins' Pair

If what Ernie McLean says is true, there may be more signings of under-aged junior players by professional hockey teams.

Victoria Cougars of the Western Canada League have already lost Gord Roberts, a defenceman with two years of junior eligibility remaining, to New England Whalers of the World Hockey Association.

Now McLean, owner-coach of the WCHL's New Westminster Bruins, says a National League team has offered him $200,000 each for the services of defencemen Brad Maxwell and Barry Beck.

The offer, says McLean, was made by an NHL club "with a poor defence and lots of money."

Like Roberts, Beck and Maxwell — the latter a native of Victoria — aren't supposed to be eligible to the professionals until they complete the 1976-77 season.

NHL president Clarence Campbell was quoted earlier this week as saying NHL teams will continue to honor an amateur agreement although the amateur draft pact between his league and the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association has expired.

The WHA, which Victoria coach Pat Ginnell says "stands for 'Won't Honor Anything' and not 'World Hockey Association'," also has no official agreement.

The NHL offer to New Westminster, which McLean says was "made in the strictest confidence," is seen as a possible move by the NHL to combat the WHA's practice of signing under-aged players without paying proper development fees.

Meanwhile, on the ice, Kamloops Chiefs stretched their undefeated streak to five games Friday by playing Saskatoon Blades to a 2-2 tie.

The Blades, who trail the East Division-leading Winnipeg Clubs by one point but have four games in hand, play the Cougars tonight while the Chiefs, two points behind New Westminster in the Western standing, make their way into Memorial Arena on Saunday.

Tonight's game starts at 8:30, Sunday's at 7 p.m.

Despite the tie, Chiefs suffered a loss. Winger Kelly Ferner suffered a shoulder dislocation and may be lost to Kamloops for three weeks.

In the only other game Friday, Regina Pats edged Edmonton Oil Kings 4-3.

Canadian Wrestler Wins; U.S. Swimmers Too Good

MEXICO CITY (CP) — The honey in Javier Serrano's water bottle turned to vinegar at the Pan-American Games Friday night and the crowd at the Greco-Roman wrestling finals didn't care for the miracle.

A United States wrestler, blind in one eye, suffered a cut over the other eye when accidentally kicked by an opponent but fought on to win a gold medal.

And another American with a bullet lodged in his throat and his jaw held together with surgeon's wire finished second behind Howard Stupp of Montreal, who won Canada's only gold medal of the day.

Canada's share of the medals consisted of Stupp's gold in the featherweight class of wrestling, two bronzes in other wrestling divisions and a silver and three bronzes in the Pan-Am pool.

Serrano, a Mexican light heavyweight, was wrestling Willie Williams of the U.S. for a gold medal and leading on points when officials discovered he was drinking a liquid containing honey between rounds and disqualified him. International rules say the competitors can drink only water.

The crowd loudly expressed its disapproval, showering the ring with programs and other debris until Williams, in the diplomatic coup of the Games, persuaded the officials to allow the bout to continue.

He pinned the Mexican in the next round and won a rousing ovation from a crowd which has been sparing in its applause for U.S. athletes.

Flyweight Bruce Thompson of Minneapolis, captain of the U.S. team, suffered the gash over his good eye while wrestling Enrique Jimenez in his final bout but persevered to defeat the Mexican.

Featherweight Gary Alexander, also of Minneapolis, returned to competition after being shot in the face three years ago and gained his silver by outpointing Julio Gutierrez of Mexico after an earlier loss to Stupp. The Canadian then met Gutierrez in the final match.

"It was kind of a squeaker," said the 20-year-old McGill University engineering student, who was cautioned three times during the bout.

Canadian swimmers were no were no match for the Americans, who match for the Americans finished 1-2 in three individual races and won handily in the men's 400-metre medley relay.

Jill Quirk of Pointe Claire, Que., finished just ahead of Anne Jardin of Pointe Claire to claim the bronze in the men's 100-metre freestyle.

Janice Stenhouse of Surrey, and Michele Oliver of Agincourt, Ont., also finished 3-4 in the women's 800 freestyle behind Wendy Weinberg and Mary Montgomery of the U.S. as another Games record fell.

Bruce Robertson of Vancouver and Gary MacDonald of Mission, B.C., third and fifth in the men's 100 freestyle, returned to the pool a few minutes later to play a decisive part in winning the Canadian silver in the relay.

Hull 'Jets' Problem'

WINNIPEG (CP) — Bobby Hull's position with Winnipeg Jets remained uncertain today following conflicting reports on the reason for his absence from the Jets' World Hockey Association game Friday night.

The Jets issued a brief statement Friday saying the star left winger has been given permission to miss practices and games "temporarily in his own attempt to protest hockey brutality and the type of goon hockey that has been played recently."

But a report on one Winnipeg radio station, said Hull denied the statement and said he has been given a few days off to rest.

Hull was otherwise unavailable for comment.

Jets' general manager Rudy Pilous maintained that the reason for Hull's boycott was his desire to bring attention to the violence in hockey.

But Pilous said he himself didn't feel the play in the WHA this season was as rough as last year.

"That incident we had here the other night was one of the worse I've ever seen," he said, referring to an incident when Perry Miller of the Jets fought three Cincinnati Stingers and received an eye injury.

Ben Hatskin, the league's board chairman, said Friday hockey in the WHA "is not a brutal game."

"We have the greatest superstar of all, Gordie Howe (of Houston Aeros), and he says this is easy compared to what he went through before."

"Hull is one of our stars, but this is first a Jets' matter and then a league matter," Hatskin said, adding he had not spoken with Hull.

"I haven't seen any brutality in the games I have seen," Hatskin said.

TV NETWORK CLAIMS RECORD FOR VIEWERS

NEW YORK (AP) — A total of 71-million viewers — the largest audience ever to watch a baseball game on television, saw Cincinnati Reds defeat Boston Red Sox, 4-3, in the seventh game of the world series on Oct. 22, NBC Research estimated Friday.

The previous one-game viewing record of 63.1 million was set in the second game of the 1973 New York Mets-Oakland A's world series.

NBC estimated a total of 367 million viewers for the seven games of the Cincinnati-Boston series, the largest television audience for any world series.

The only other sporting event ever to attract more viewers was the 1975 Super Bowl game between Pittsburgh and Minnesota which had an estimated 71.3 million viewers.

Cranston Stays Close In Skate Canada Meet

EDMONTON (CP) — Toller Cranston, Canada's top male skater, says he doesn't like competition, but a crowd of about 4,500 at Edmonton Coliseum and thousands more watching on television Friday night saw no sign of his discontent.

The innovative 26-year-old, participating in the third annual Skate Canada competition, had the fans jumping almost from the first moments of his short program in which several basic elements were compulsory.

Although he did not overtake Igor Bobrin, Russia's fifth-ranked skater, to capture first place, Cranston remained close behind the leader with the free-skating segment—the Canadian's specialty—yet to come.

Cranston said he was basically content with his performance, "but my best is always in the future."

Ron Shaver of Cambridge, Ont., had some difficulty with his compulsory short program and failed to improve on the fourth-place position. Laszlo Vajda of Hungary remained in third position. Two of Canada's three young female competitors had a good night.

Susan MacDonald of Vancouver, Canada's mighty mite of skating at 4 feet-11 and 85 pounds, overcame a toothache to climb into fourth place after two rounds and Camille Rebus of Edmonton improved her position to sixth from eighth.

Rebus, Canadian junior womens' titlist, was clearly ahead of Kim Alletson of Ottawa, considered by many the likely successor to current senior champion Lynn Nightingale, her clubmate.

Canada's top dance team, Barbara Berezowski of Toronto and David Porter of Port Perry, Ont., turned in another solid display and retained third place behind the leaders, Natalia Linichuk and Gennadi Karponosov of Russia.

Flames Finally Get Hot

By The Canadian Press

Los Angeles Kings turned out to be a tonic Friday night for the ailing offence of Atlanta Flames.

The Flames, lowest-scoring team in the National Hockey League with 11 goals in six games before Friday, pulled themselves together to stun the Kings 7-1 at Atlanta.

"We needed this win, it was a must for us," said Claude St. Sauveur, who scored his first two goals against the Kings. "We'll be playing more relaxed from now on."

In Friday's other NHL games, Toronto Maple Leafs stopped Washington Capitals 6-3 and Vancouver Canucks defeated Minnesota North Stars 4-2.

Hilliard Graves also scored two goals for the Flames, his second and third of the year, and Tom Lysiak, Rey Comeau and Larry Carriere added one each.

The Kings, trounced 9-0 by Montreal Canadiens in their season opener, were missing the discipline Friday night that gave them the league's fourth best record last year.

Los Angeles coach Bob Pulford refused to blame the one-sided score on goalie Gary Edwards, saying, "Tonight it seemed we weren't up to play and nobody played."

They managed only 16 shots on goal against Atlanta goalie Dan Bouchard, and wasted two power plays without getting a shot on goal.

Don Kozak ruined Bouchard's shutout bid with a goal midway through the final period.

Lanny McDonald's breakaway goal with 8:57 gone in the third period proved to be the winner as the Leafs extended Washington's winless streak to nine games. The Capitals have only one tie to show for those nine games.

Darryl Sittler scored twice for Toronto, the second goal into an empty net after the Capitals pulled their goalie with 1:02 to play. Don Ashby, Erroll Thompson and Inge Hammarstrom had one goal each for Toronto.

Paulin Bordeleau and Dennis Ververgaert scored in the second and third periods Friday night to give Vancouver its win.

Bordeleau picked up a flip pass from centre Bobby Lalonde after cutting behind the Minnesota defence, pulled out netminder Cesare Maniago and neatly tucked the puck into the corner.

Burton Takes Over as Boxla Boss

By D'ARCY KAVANAGH
Times Staff

After 25 years of operation, the Western Lacrosse Association has finally appointed a Vancouver Island resident as commissioner.

Roy Burton, a 47-year-old Victoria resident and assistant commissioner this year, was named Friday in Vancouver by league directors as the successor to Colin Cruickshank.

Cruickshank has officially retired after three turbulent years in office, but will unofficially remain in office until he clears up financial matters for the past season.

"I think it's right they (league directors) should at least attempt to have an Island commissioner," said Burton prior to Friday's announcement. "It indicated no favoritism to the mainland."

A native of White Rock, Burton has had a long career in lacrosse as a player, a referee and an executive.

In 1947, he played for the western junior all-star team which lost to St. Catharines in the Minto Cup final.

The following season he joined North Shore Indians in senior competition and was selected the league's top rookie. The next year he finished second in team scoring behind Mel Jones. He retired as a player in 1952.

Burton began the second phase of his lacrosse career in 1953 when he joined the Inter-City League as a referee. Three years later he was the western referee in the Mann Cup final, which Nanaimo won in Toronto.

Burton quit officiating in 1959 when he went into private business. Until 1970 his main association with lacrosse was the sponsorship of several teams.

A resident of Victoria since 1966, Burton became actively involved with the sport again in 1971 when he was instrumental in creating the Vancouver Island Lacrosse Officials' Association.

The next year he was elected president of the B.C. Lacrosse Officials' Association after helping reactivate the group. He was a director of the association the following two years.

One of the first actions Burton plans to take as commissioner is to meet with the directors and draw up a set of bylaws strictly applicable for the WLA.

He also intends to delegate more authority to the directors.

Burton hopes the WLA executive will keep with the past season's policy and have two assistant commissioners help with the heavy workload. Both, he added, should be on the mainland, with Bob Cole an obvious choice. Cole was an assistant with Burton this past year.

Things are going so well for the Capital City Turf Club in its operation of thoroughbred racing at Sandown Park that even important people are beginning to take notice.

Earlier this year when directors of the CCTC were negotiating for Sandown it was suggested by no less than Jack Diamond, president of the B.C. Jockey Club that, "they don't know what they are getting into."

It was Diamond's contention then, and this was only shortly before the B.C. Derby at Exhibition Park in mid-September that he still didn't feel that Sandown was a viable operation. However, he was willing to lease the property to the local turf club, if they wanted to try, but the warning was there nonetheless. He, personally, didn't think it would go.

Well, since then, all sorts of things have happened at Sandown. The first day, the meeting opened in the rain and the turnout was considered "fantastic" by CCTC officials. The second day, a Saturday, all signs were "go" for a great day when power failure hit the premises. Still it was a fine day for the mutuels. Came Monday, a similar story. A new record for an ordinary Monday. Wednesday, another mark, and then yesterday, over $160,000 through the mutuels on a cold and windy afternoon.

As of now, if the wagering continues apace, and the weather moderates, a modicum of success is at least assured; and more perhaps a good indication that maybe the B.C. Jockey Club is taking another look. Or failing that, that Victoria deserves a chance to do it again next year with a better break in dates.

So, that's in the future. Friday, the distinguished visitor was Merv Peters, Director of Racing at Exhibition Park for the B.C. Jockey Club.

Sure, he was just there as a spectator, but in a capsule comment he said he thought the reception to horse racing was, considering the weather, et al, "exceptional."

Which doesn't mean he backs the venture, but does mean there has been more at Sandown than previously met the eyes of the B.C. Jockey Club.

And another person who might agree, even though it was a real twist in racing, is Earl MacKenzie of 1701 Carnegie Street. MacKenzie won a lottery conducted by the United Way, based on the running of the seventh and feature race. He drew the lucky ticket on No. 1, Charlie's Capri, and was awarded a cheque for $2,421.60, representing 65 per cent of money collected at the track by radio and TV personalities for United Way, which received the remainder.

Charlie Capril was an easy winner and a mild surprise. He paid $15.80 and combined with Curly G for a quinella of $24.00.

Actually it was a day for good prices mixed with the odd favorite. The longest price was returned by Glenlyon Mac ($16.60) in the eighth and with Airdrie Bob combined for an Exactor of $219.60, a record for the meeting.

There were two nice quinellas as well, Hard Choice and Young Hopeful returning $82.00 in the second and Ginger Smoke and Funny Bridge $91.20 in the third.

There was also a disqualification, the first of the meeting, when favored Charlie George, ridden by Gart Carter, was put back to second for interfering with a charging Carm's victory in the sixth.

When the power failed last Saturday, there was a mistake in the mutuel department resulting in a short payoff on Bum Money, an 11-1 choice, the payoff was only $12. It should have been $24 and, under Department of Agriculture rules, monies of this nature cannot be kept by the association and must be returned to the bettors which the $2,200 was in the first-race Exactor Friday.

'MANASSA MAULER' AILING

NEW YORK (AP) — Jack Dempsey, 80, the former world heavyweight boxing champion, was admitted to New York University Hospital early this morning, suffering from an unknown ailment.

Dempsey was reported in "satisfactory condition" by a hospital spokesman, who would not disclose the nature of his illness.

Known to millions around the world as the Manassa Mauler, Dempsey held the championship for seven years, claiming the title on July 4, 1919 at the age of 24 by scoring a third-round knockout over Jess Willard on a sweltering afternoon in Toledo, Ohio.

Dempsey lost his title to Gene Tunney in a 10-round decision on Sept. 23, 1926.

After retiring for good in 1932, Dempsey became a restauranteur.

Scorpion Rebounding in Big Hands

Victoria Scorpions will be without two of last year's best rebounders for the upcoming Dogwood Inter-City Senior "A" Men's Basketball League season but coach Howard Tooby isn't likely to miss any sleep over the losses.

Tom Holmes, the tallest player on the club last year at six-foot-six, is teaching school at Campbell River while 6'5" Brian Brumwell is attending university in Oregon.

However, Tooby has some new men with big hands who should prove more than adequate replacements.

One is Dave Mulcahy, a rugged 6'7" forward who earned Canada West all-star honors last season with University of Victoria Vikings.

Another is 6'7" Gary Budd, who was with Green River College in Washington last year.

Mike Zuwerkalow is a husky 6'6" 225 pounder who will also give the Scorpions muscle up front, something they lacked last year.

Zuwerkalow played for the University of Waterloo last year and works with the Canadian Armed Forces in the navy. His position will occasionally make his playing status doubtful.

All three are expected to be in the lineup tonight when the Scorpions go against Renton Roadrunners in an exhibition game at 8:30 p.m. at UVic's old gym. A senior women's contest between Seattle Sandpipers and Victoria Home Lumber will precede the men's game at 7 p.m.

Sunday, the Scorpions and Roadrunners will play at 2:30 p.m. at the same site after the Sandpipers and Lumber crew tangle at 1 p.m.

Scorpions open their regular-season schedule Nov. 1-2 on the mainland with two games against North Shore Mountaineers. They play their first home games Nov. 8-9 against Vancouver Capilanos, who beat them in the playoff final last year.

The Dogwood League opened the regular season Thursday in Vancouver with Burnaby Bullets defeating the Capilanos 92-76 and the Mountaineers downing Vancouver A's 110-106.

Besides the tall trio of Budd, Mulcahy and Zuwerkalow, the Scorpions will feature a brother act with Don, Walt and Bob Burrows.

One Victoria strongpoint should be the backcourt, where Don and Walt Burrows, Brian MacKenzie, Dave Morgan, Grant Boland, who was with Simon Fraser University last year, and Harry Hunter, who played in the Victoria senior "B" league, will be will be more than just an exoperating.

Tonight's contest will be more than just an exhibition game for several Scorpions. With 14 currently on the roster, Tooby is two over the league limit and must soon trim his squad.

Mt. Doug Trips Bays

Mt. Douglas' gain was Oak Bay's loss Friday.

Mt. Douglas built up a 4-0 lead and then held on to defeat Oak Bay 4-3 in a battle between second-place teams in the Greater Victoria High School Soccer League.

Mt. Doug moved to within two points of first-division leading Reynolds while Oak Bay, in losing, missed a chance to tie Spectrum for the lead in the second division.

In other games Friday, Reynolds protected its first-place grip by overpowering St. Michael's 8-0; Claremont nipped Parkland 1-0 and Belmont-Fisher edged Esquimalt 3-2 in an evening game at Royal Athletic Park.

Kevin Kendall scored two goals while Tom Boothroyd and Ross Main collected singles for Mt. Doug. Mike Miller, Joe Mendonca and Charlie Fisher replied for the Bays.

Clayton Booth, and Keith Thompson of Reynolds each scored three times to boost their season's goals total to 12, one behind scoring leader Julius Karpati of Spectrum.

Harold Willers' strong netminding and a goal by Doug Burns provided the difference at Claremont as the Spartans edged Parkland.

Mike Laberge, Bruce Roberts and Bill Merrimen were scorers for Belmont-Fisher. Scott Matheson and Pat Duncan hit for Esquimalt.

Entzminger Hot

John Entzminger holds a hot hand in the South Island Junior "B" Hockey League.

A forward who tried out with Calgary Centennials of the Western Canada eague, Entzminger recorded his second successive three-goal effort Friday as Esquimalt Legion defeated Fuller Lake Flyers 9-4 at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Murray Allen scored a pair while John Bechtold, Kevin Kennedy, Terry Parsons and Jim Entzminger each added one as Legion pulled into sole possession of first place, two points ahead of Saanich.

Terry Ellison, with three, and Lee Clackson connected for Flyers.

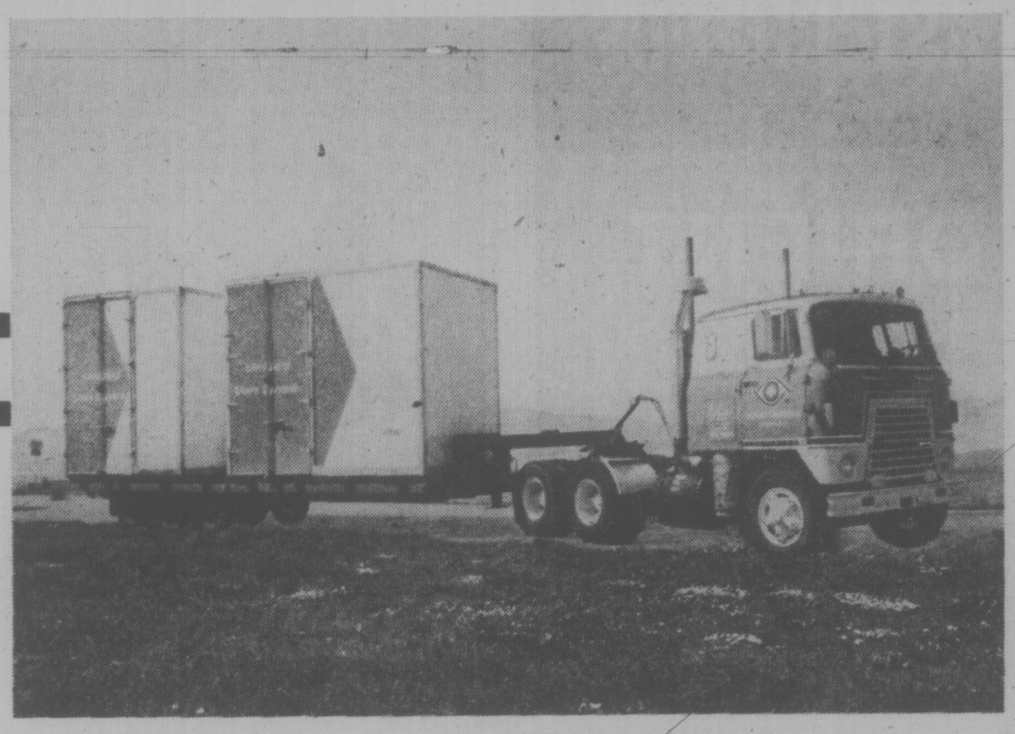
EATON'S

take a look at this vehicle . . .



it's a moving van, right?

Long distance

wrong. It's the latest thing in moving. It's called Domestic Container Service.

WHAT'S THAT, YOU SAY?

Domestic Container Service is a form of unitized moving. Shippers and transport companies have been doing it for 20 years. Now *United Van Lines has introduced this accepted concept to domestic moves. It results in on-time loading and delivery and eliminates unnecessary handling of furniture.

THIS NEW WAY OF MOVING:

- DECREASES COSTS
- PROVIDES BETTER SERVICE
- REDUCES DAMAGE
- REDUCES FRUSTRATIONS, UNEASINESS

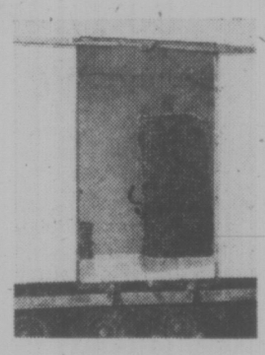
WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO YOU?

- On-Time Loading and Delivery. No other person's shipment can interfere with your loading date and time.
- Reduced transit time. There is no delay in transit caused by the need to "fill out" a furniture van.
- Complete Security. Your household goods are enclosed in strong, waterproof, tested fibreglas containers — by themselves. Each customer has own container or containers.
- Less Handling. Once your goods are loaded, wrapped in Sanitized furniture pads, they are sealed in, not disturbed until you break the seal at your new residence.
- Exclusive use of containers means more protection for you and your family. Your goods are not mixed with someone elses'. All our containers and pads are Sanitized frequently to ensure your safety.
- Defined Responsibility. Places the responsibility for loading, transporting and unloading where it belongs — with your United member at origin and destination.
- Air-Ride Transportation. Air-ride suspension trailers means your containers are gentled from one place to another.
- Computer Control. Computer knows where your container is at all times, tells us when delivery will take place—for sure.

this is the way we move you long distance now:

1. All household goods are packed and prepared for transportation in the normal manner;
2. On loading day United's container loading specialists arrive with specially-designed containers, clean, Sanitized and locked;
3. The ease of loading will please you, and if you wish, a seal will be provided that you yourself can seal the container doors with;
4. Your container shipment is gently handled by fork-lift from the local container-trailer onto the highway container-trailer;
5. United's central dispatch with computer-control speeds your container to destination city on an air-cushion-ride container trailer;
6. If storage in transit is required, your container is not unloaded but stored with supervision at a United member's location;
7. Delivery at destination is accomplished in the same manner as loading, by container specialists. You can break the seal on the container doors.

of course, we specialize in local moves too!



Sanitized furniture pads protect your treasured items from jiggling and scratching.

Fork lifting one of the units to the highway container.

Packed unit means every item travels right-way-up!

CAIRO CAMEL driver knows he has tourist bonanza at the Pyramids. Raised hands don't really mean surrender, but indicate "not enough" to offer of money for a ride.

Egypt woos tourists

By JOHN PINKERMAN

CAIRO (CNS) — Egypt for centuries has had tourist attractions, and many of them are right here in and around Cairo. It is just now, however, that the government of President Anwar Sadat has decided to get into the global market for tourists' dollars, pounds, francs, yen, marks and other currency.

One would have to give the Egyptians A for effort. They enter the tourism market under all kinds of handicaps and so far a fair evaluation of how you are going to like your stay in this city of over 6 million would be that there's still a long way to go.

The pyramids are here and the famous Sphinx is here and that gives Egypt a head start — not only for tourist dollars but for the serious study of archeologists and historians from around the world. The climate is mild to hot but almost always bearable — and that beats New York, London or Tokyo. The hotel situation goes from outstanding (the Nile Hilton) to satisfactory (the new Shepheard's) to spartan. Five hundred miles south in Aswan is the Aswan Obervi, one of the world's great hotels.

The problem, partly, is lack of experience in the government and in the private business sector's approach to tourism. Five wars with Israel, long isolation from the modern world and a persistent national inferiority complex makes the Egyptians, other than the exceedingly hospitable so-called "man on the street," suspicious of strangers.

It can be seen in the attitude of officials who may be entertaining tourists, the people behind the desks in hotels, the clerks in stores and even your waiter at dinner (7:30 to 10:30). The attitude is not deliberately offensive but it has a negative effect on the more sensitive tourists.

What Sadat's ministry of tourism people may need is a fast six-week course — with the tourist-conscious Japanese as teachers. Or, heaven forbid, with the Israelis as eeachers. Once these people learn to be outgoing and to exploit the many jewels they possess, they will be overrun with visitors—and with the money that these visitors spend.

Their inexperience aside, there is much to see in Cairo — and much to do besides going back 5,000 years in the famed Cairo Museum.

An exploration of the pyramids is an experience in history and in fun — the fun being a camel ride. You may wince when the camel driver beats his animal to get him to sit for mounting by a paying customer, but the experts say the camel doesn't really mind. There is a spectacular nightly show called Sounds and Lights that brings the pyramids and Sphinx to life — but make sure you get there the night the narration is in English. Press your host closely on this because he has been known to send English-speaking visitors to the French language night, and vice versa. Also, make sure the museum is open when you make your date there; it has odd closing hours in tune with religious holidays.

Another prime interest place is the Citadel, built in 1183 and long a bastion for defence against the many invaders who sought to seize this city by the Nile.

Canadian Pacific or CP Air's "Ski Canada West" program offers Banff, Lake Louise and Jasper in the Alberta Rockies and Whistler Mountain in British Columbia as holiday destinations.

A typical seven-day package to Banff Springs Hotel for example, includes:

Six nights accommodation, motor coach transportation to and from Calgary's airport and hotel, plus daily ground transportation to the ski area of your choice (Lake Louise, Sunshine or Mount Norquay), tow passes for five days, a Sunday night reception at the Banff Springs Hotel in Banff, a sleigh ride and a western-style outdoor barbecue with dance band on Wednesday night.

Cost runs from $139 to $178 per skier double occupancy. Tack on the price of your airfare but remember that the length of stay and value of the ground package entitles you to a special inclusive tour fare that can reduce the regular economy airfare by approximately 30 per cent.

This package is also of interest to non-skiers. They are treated to a special sightseeing itinerary.

Cross-country skiers are also advised to consider this tour. Special arrangements are made for them upon arrival and for weather sensitive helicopter service required by deep powder skiers planning to ski the great untracked.

CP Air's Transpacific Tours offers a choice of packaged vacations ranging from two or three-day learn-to-ski trips for businessmen and families at Grouse Mountain, near Vancouver to full ski weeks at Whistler Mountain in British Columbia or Jasper and Banff in Alberta. They also offer glacier heli-skiing (by helicopter) in the Cariboos out of Valemont, B.C. or Bugaboo skiing from Radium Hot Springs also in B.C.

An extra at both Fairmont Hot Springs and at Kimberley, B.C. is a lesson or two in kite flying. Include the long runs at Tod Mountain and you have what may be the widest and wildest choice of skiing thrills available anywhere.

Pacific Western Airways "Ski Bird" vacations introduce the giants of the British Columbia interior. Names such as Big White, Silver Star, Apex Alpine, Tod Mountain, Kimberley, Fairmont Hot Springs, Panorama Mountain, Radium Hot Springs (helicopter skiing) and Snow Valley are as confusing as they are overpowering to the first timer.

This is big mountain country. Eye-popping scenery and long uncrowded runs over a deep and bountiful snow cover (both Panorama and Tod boast more than 3,000 lift-serviced vertical feet) are ski area features that are taken for granted in British Columbia.

Air Canada's "Skifari Western Canada" makes Banff and Jasper, easily accessible to mid-continental and eastern skiers. Radium and Fairmont Hot Springs are two new package destinations added to the 1975-76 program.

The mammoth runs at Whistler Mountain (4,280 lift-serviced vertical feet) 75 miles north of Vancouver are the west coast choice for their ski holiday program.

The five major ski areas clustered around Thunder Bay, Ont. (Thunder Country, Box 1242, Thunder Bay, Ontario for details) are packaged by Transair and Air Canada, principally from Toronto and Winnipeg, with North Central flying north to the Bay from Minneapolis.

Montreal is the skier's door to the many and varied resorts in wintertime Quebec. The Quebec Laurentians — Mont Tremblant, Gray Rocks, Sun Valley, Chantecler — are within an hour's drive northward along the Laurentian Autoroute and the equally popular Ski East mountain areas such as Sutton, Bromont or Orford are close by to the southeast.

Air Canada, Delta, CP, Eastern, Alleghany and Northeast Airlines take skiers at special package rates to Montreal while Quebecair, in conjunction with connecting carriers, goes on to Quebec City for those who want to test the groomed runs of Mont-Sainte-Anne or to experience the 200 miles of cross-country trails through the forested mountains. (Refer to Destination Quebec brochure for details).

Fur trading post to tourist lure

Lower Fort Garry in Manitoba is one of the oldest authentic fur trading forts in North America, and annually attracts almost half a million visitors who enjoy this unique glimpse of Canadian pioneer days.

Built in the 1830s by the Hudson's Bay Company, the fort was a thriving community which was never subject to military attack.

At one time a centre for the western fur trade and for exploration to the northwest, later a training base for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, it is today a popular national historic attraction for travellers from around the world.

The grandeur of the fort's finest hours is preserved in the original buildings on the grounds, stocked with period furniture and artifacts.

Among them are the Governor's Big House, Fraser House, the RCMP stables, the rooms in the four corner bastions, and the fur loft where beaver and muskrat pelts reach to the rafters.

Explaining details about pioneer life are several costumed staff members, among them a blacksmith, weaver, spinner, embroiderer, furrier, baker, dyer and candle maker, who demonstrate their crafts to the delight of visitors.

Of particular interest is the engineer's cottage, once the home of a Scottish family named Abel who lived there in the 1860s.

It houses such treasures as an 1850 sewing machine, a genuine feather tick mattress, homespun linen, and an old-time parlor melodeon.

Lower Fort Garry is located 20 miles from the provincial capital, Winnipeg, not far from the town of Selkirk. Two riverboats offer daily excursion trips to the site from Winnipeg. It is open daily from May to September.

Scenic Switzerland offers bargains

By RON WELLS

GENEVA (CNS) — If there is anything that still can be called a bargain in Europe, then Switzerland is it.

The picturesque little nation may not offer too many monetary bargains but it does provide visitors with cultural, scenic, historical and social "bargains" unmatched in all of Europe.

Within the Swiss borders visitors will find five distinct cultures: (1) French, (2) German, (3) Italian and (4) Romansh (a dialect and culture left from original Roman settlers), all of which have been incorporated under the (5) "umbrella" Swiss culture.

Many experienced travelers believe that the Swiss multiculture provides first-time visitors to Europe with a perfect introduction to the continent. Indeed, Switzerland could be called a microcosm of Europe.

The Swiss are extremely honest and open. They take great pride in their country, canton (state), city, town or village, as witnessed by well-kept buildings and the total absence of litter.

An example of Swiss pride is the Public Art in Basel, which enjoys the full monetary backing of practically the entire population of the city's 205,100 persons.

There is also good-natured rivalry between inhabitants of some of the cities and regions. One of the oldest of such rivalries is between Zurich and Basel.

It is a standard comment, depending on which side you're on, to say, "The best thing about (insert either Zurich or Basel) is the train to (insert the remaining city)."

For scenery, it's difficult to match the rugged beauty of the Swiss Alps; the delicate charm of the lake and wine-growing regions of Neuchatel and Vaud; the primeval splendor of forests which cover 25 per cent of the country; and the picturesque rural areas with rolling hills and fascinating old combination farmhouses and barns.

Cities have much to offer in the way of beautiful scenery.

Four cities — Zurich, Bienne, Neuchatel and Lausanne — are nestled along the shores of lakes.

Two cities — Zurich and Basel — have rivers dividing them in half. The Limmat River flows out of Lake Zurich and through the City of Zurich, and the mighty Rhine flows through Basel and affords Switzerland with its only navigable waterway to the sea.

If history is your thing, Switzerland is for you. Swiss cities and towns abound with 13th, 14th and 15th Century buildings which are still very much in use today.

Throughout the country one can see remnants of ancient Rome, whose legions, under Julius Caesar, marched through, conquered, controlled and settled this area as early as 58 B.C.

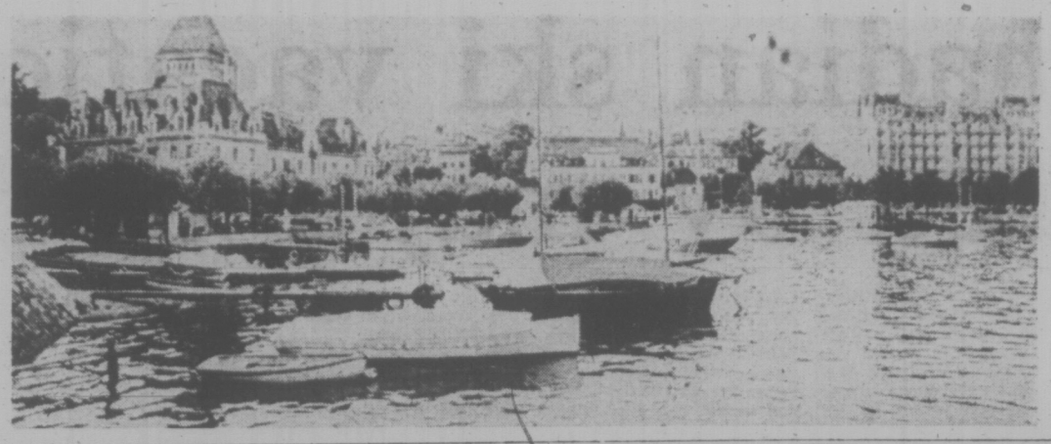
In the village of Avenches, originally the Roman town of Aventicum and one of the first established towns in Switzerland, one can find excellent examples of Roman architecture and artwork.

During the summer a series of classical plays is presented in the ancient amphitheater, which has been partially restored. Visitors may roam at will through the ruins while viewing in the distance a section of the Roman Wall.

In Basel, one may stay in the oldest deluxe hotel in Switzerland, the Hotel Three Kings, which dates back to the 13th Century. Although the hotel has been completely renovated, its history and tradition prevail along with its commanding view of the Rhine.

Or, you can stroll beneath a narrow covered walkway above the Limmat River in Zurich. The walkway was built onto the wall, which protected old Zurich.

In Switzerland, the past and present have formed a beautiful partnership.



LAUSANNE is one of several cities nestled around shimmering, snow-fed lakes. These cities offer variety of aquatic activities such as fishing, boating and water skiing.

Tourists follow Mounties' trail in Saskatchewan

Canada's famed scarlet-coated RCMP (the "Mounties") are particularly associated with the prairie province of Saskatchewan, which is dotted with historic forts and sites testifying to the colorful role they played in the taming of the west.

Today, many tourists are following the "Mounties Trail" to recapture the glamor of Canada's pioneer past.

They generally start at Wood Mountain Fort, about 30 miles southwest of Assiniboia, which was established in 1874.

It was here that Chief Sitting Bull went with his Sioux Indians after the decisive battle of the Little Big Horn.

Here a reconstructed log barracks houses a scale model of the original fort.

Further along the Trail is Fort Walsh in the Cypress Hills.

The Hills are the highest point in the flatlands of Saskatchewan, and the air is pleasant with the scent of pines which encircle gem-like lakes.

Campsites and cabins are available.

Fort Walsh lies close to the spot where the massacre of an Indian band by white renegades was directly responsible for the formation of the North West Mounted Police, as the "Mounties" were first called.

It is also the site of the last recorded buffalo kill, and for years was the breeding ground for the magnificent horses used by the "Mounties" in their spectacular Musical Ride.

The next point of interest is Fort Battleford, which was for a short time the headquarters of the Force. On display here is the first printing press in the Northwest, hauled 600 miles by Red River cart.

The Fort is located in what was at one time Indian Cree country, ruled by Chief Poundmaker.

The formidable palisade is still there, and also the garrison commander's home full of period items.

Antibes must be noisiest in Europe

By STAN DELAPLANE

SAINT PAUL, France — This is an ancient walled village, fifteen minutes up in the Maritime Alps from Antibes on the fashionable Cote d'Azure. Cobblestoned alleyways wind through antique arches and flowers tumble over the edge of iron balconies.

It's an artist's dream: Tiny plazas where worn stone fountains splash in the sun. Hobnailed doors. Stone bridges and alcoved tea rooms.

The air smells of wild tyme, lavender and roses. Geraniums and blue morning glories everywhere. And snowy pigeons coo on sun-struck roofs.

This is the halfway house between elegant Chateau du Domaine Saint-Martin at Vence ($150 a day) and Antibes which must be the noisiest town in Europe.

Antibes is fringed with palms and the blue sea. You should bring ear plugs. Pedestrians perform bullfight veronicas as they dodge careening sports cars and smoking buses.

A thousand motor scooters with bikini-bottomed passengers leave a blitz of ear-splitting explosions. If there's a quiet gap, jack-hammers fill it in.

A bus sign said "St. Paul de Vence." I got on and didn't bother with a return ticket.

For $12 you get a clean and modest room at the Cafe de la Place. It's over a pool hall but if you're coming from the Chateau, remember you're saving $138 a day.

For the $12 you get a bath.

A tiny balcony. Breakfast of fresh-baked croissants and a pot of strong black coffee.

French artists discovered St. Paul a long time ago. Everybody in the street carries a paint brush.

The Cafe de la Place is owned by Yves Montand — he owns just about everything in St. Paul. The pool tables date back to la Belle Epogue. The busy bar is eyebrow high. You stand on tiptoe and put a franc in a gumball machine. Out pops a handful of tiny green olives.

Even though you live above a pool hall, you are next door to the Maegt Foundation, one of the finest modern art museums in Europe.

Across the street you can have dinner under the stars and lime trees in the garden court of Columbe d'Or. (Yves Montand owns that too.) On these cool October nights, waiters tuck a shawl around your shoulders.

Grande dame with plenty of jewels gets a shawl. And so help me, they brought a shawl for her bulldog seated next to her. (Haute dog?)

Food is excellent. The escargots have enough garlic to blow a safe. The local wine doesn't "travel" as the wine people say. And this wine never left town.

"How much time should we allow to ship things home for Christmas from Mexico?"

Anything from a week to forever. I never ship anything from Mexico. Sometimes it's worked. But mostly I didn't get it and could get no answer from the place where I bought it. Anything you can't carry home, forget it.

29-day tour of Australia

A 29-day study of the flora, fauna, food and cities of Australia is being offered to Canadians by the Office of Academic Liaison in Montreal.

The tour, one of the finest ever offered to Canadians wanting to visit the country "down under" includes such contrasts as the bubbling nightlife of Sydney's Kings Cross to life on a lazy tropical Great Barrier Reef Island.

The idea of the program is to thoroughly educate Canadians about the contrasting styles of Australian life. Therefore the program has been called Australian Contrasts.

Using Vancouver as a gateway, visitors are flown to Sydney to start their tour.

The initial part of the tour is spent in Queensland with a brief look at its capital Brisbane and then a visit to Cairns and South Molle Island in the Whitsunday Group of the Great Barrier Reef.

Visitors eat delicious reef fish, explore the coral and bathe in the balmy waters of the island.

From the Reef, Canadians fly to the mainland and across the southeastern corner of Australia to Adelaide.

During a seven day stay in South Australia, visitors see the sights of Adelaide, explore the rugged beauty of Kangaroo Island off the coast of the state and visit Barossa Valley the heart of Australia's wine industry.

During the overnight stay on the island, visitors get the chance to explore the lovely scenery and see the wildlife including koalas and platypuses.

The tour takes great interest in showing visitors the natural attractions of the country including the less crowded tourist attractions of the eastern seaboard.

Vacation cruise can suit all pocketbooks

By LEAVITT F. MORRIS

Cruises come tailored to fit almost anyone's allotted vacation time and pocketbook. And they sail from many U.S. ports to just about any destination in the world.

Among the U.S. ports of departure of the 11 leading transatlantic and cruise lines are New York; Miami; Port Everglades, Florida; New Orleans; Baltimore; Boston; Los Angeles; and San Francisco.

Passengers sailing from New York will be using the new $40-million consolidated passenger terminal which features clean and modern pier facilities, a 1,000-car topside parking area, a glass-walled baggage hall, and lounges.

Seagoing vacationers will find more variety of entertainment aboard cruise liners than ever before, including performances of professionals seen on Broadway.

A check-list compiled by the International Passenger Ship Association representing the 11 leading cruise companies reveals the many advantages in both cost and time that a sea voyage can provide.

First and foremost: a cruise is a complete travel package —the majority of costs are taken care of the moment the ticket has been purchased. Once aboard, the ship becomes a "home base" at sea and in every port visited—and that means no unpacking and repacking.

The widest variety of cruise destinations ever is available this autumn and winter. Trips range in length from 2 days to 25 days.

The longer voyages touch ports in the Mediterranean, South America, and the South Pacific, and the Orient, while the shorter cruises put in at Bermuda, the Bahamas, Puerto Rico and a dozen or so Caribbean ports.

Fly-cruise holidays are becoming extremely popular among travelers across the country. Air transportation from the U.S. mainland carries cruise passengers to such distant ports as Singapore in the Far East and Piraeus in the Mediterranean, and also to such nearby departure points as the Caribbean's San Juan.

For example, the Prinsendam of the Holland America Line has scheduled a series of 23-day fly-cruise vacations from Singapore beginning Nov. 6 and continuing through March 25, with passengers flying from New York to join the ship. The Prinsendam will make calls at Penang, Belawan, Medan, Sibolga, Nias Island, Jakarta, Bali, and Surabaya. Cost, inncluding round-trip air fare, is $2,595.

Twenty-nine new air-sea cruises have been scheduled for this autumn and winter by the Royal Cruise Lines aboard the Golden Odyssey: five in the eastern Mediterranean, two in the western Mediterranean, 12 Seas of Ulysses cruises, and 10 Panama Canal voyages. Duration of all Mediterranean air-sea cruises is two weeks; the Panama program is 10 days.

All of the Royal Cruise Line air-sea cruises depart from and return to California, with the air portion of the package on World Airways 747 jumbo jets. Ports of call for the western Mediterranean cruises (the first leaving on Nov. 30) will be Crete, Malta, Tunis, or Sousse, Malaga or Palma, Gibraltar, Tangier, Casablanca, Madeira, and Las Palmas. The 10 Panama Canal cruises, which start between Dec. 20 and March 11, 1976, will visit Aruba, Cartagena, Balboa, Cristobal, El Salvador and Acapulco.

Cunard's popular Adventurer, built especially for Caribbean cruising, is expanding its fly-cruise program this fall, providing direct charter air transportation between nine cities and the ship's home base in San Juan. Cities, dates, and minimum fly-cruise package rates per person double occupancy are: Pittsburg, Nov. 15 and 22, $495; Cincinnati, Nov. 29, $530; Indianapolis, Dec. 6, $530; and St. Louis, Dec. 13, $530.

Passengers booking on these seven-day Cunard Adventurer fly-cruises will depart from their local airports Saturdays for San Juan and the ship's sailing at midnight.

The Adventurer spends all day Sunday at sea, arriving at La Guaira (Caracas), Venezuela, on Monday. On succeeding days the ship visits Grenada, Barbados, St. Lucia, St. Thomas and then on to San Juan.

Two Soviet cruise liners, the MV Odessa and the MS Mikhail Lermontov, will sail for the first time from New Orleans and Baltimore. The Odessa's cycle of seven-day cruises runs from Dec. 20 to May 20, 1976, and the destinations include Isla, Cozumel, Belize, Isla de Roatan, and Puerto Morales. The 15,000-ton Odessa accommodates 540 passengers.

The MS Mikhail Lermontov, presently sailing from New York, will move to Baltimore and begin with a nine-day cruise, starting Jan. 10, with calls at San Juan and St. Thomas. There will also be 10-, 11-, 13-, and 14-day cruises to follow; these will include stops at St. Martin, Antigua, Martinique and Guadeloupe.

Buesnos Aires is being featured by Prudential's four 20,000-ton Santa liners because of the city's great buys —especially in clothing and leather goods The Argentine government has twice devalued the peso, so that the U.S. dollar goes twice as far as it did less than a year ago. From Los Angeles, the full round-trip cruise takes 52 days; from San Francisco, 55 days; from Tacoma, Washington, and Vancouver, 63 days.

On this lengthy cruise to South America, the Santa liners also tie up at such fascinating ports as Manzanillo, Mexico; Panama City; the Panama Canal; Cartagena, Columbia; Curacao; La Guaira; Rio de Janeiro; the Strait of Magellan; Val Paraiso, Chile; Lima, Peru; Guayaquil, Equador; and Buenaventura, Colombia. Shore excursions are available in port and inland to such attractions as the Chilean lakes, Isguassu Falls, the Amazon, Cuzo and Machu Picchu.

Rates for pre-Christmas cruises are lowest, and those which include Christmas and New Year are highest, with Easter cruises nearly as high. The difference between the highest and lowest rates is about 35 to 50 per cent.

There is more informality and casualness of dress aboard cruise ships today than those of their counterparts years ago. The trend of dress more and more reflects the comfortable, colorful, and carefree attire worn by the natives of the various ports visited.

Those who enjoy dressing formally for dinner are encouraged to do so, but those who come into the dining room in open-necked sport shirts, gay-colored trousers, and pant suits won't feel out of place.

PETER MURRAY - EDITOR

Characters In Crisis

By PAT BARCLAY

W. D. Valgardson's somewhat chequered writing career began in the mid 60's, when he was still a high school teacher in towns like Snow Lake in northern Manitoba. He later studied at the University of Iowa, became head of the English Department at a private women's college in Missouri, and won the President's Medal from the University of Western Ontario for the story Bloodflowers in 1971, the same year that it was also named one of the Best American Short Stories of the year. Presently he is associate professor of English at the University of Victoria.

According to the back cover of his new collection of short stories, Valgardson's first collection (titled Bloodflowers, after his prize-winning story) has been reprinted three times in the last two years. Mind you, without knowing how many copies of Bloodflowers were printed the first two times, it's difficult to be as impressed by this statement as one would like. Still, it's an interesting indication of the popular appeal of Valgardson's work.

His new collection is titled God Is Not a Fish Inspector, after the opening story in the book, and if that sounds like a peculiar choice for a title, you should know that Valgardson's other stories in this volume bear such cryptic headings as Hunting, Saved, In Manitoba, and even more simply, Bear. So God Is Not a Fish Inspector was an obvious choice for the title story. I'd like to look at it in close-up for a moment, and see what clues it offers to the secret of its author's popular success in a genre that seems to have grown steadily more esoteric in recent years.

The main character in God Is Not a Fish Inspector is 70-year-old Fusi Bergman, who has been a fisherman all his life and who still fishes, illegally without a license, with a small rowboat and a net which is sunk below the surface of the lake, safe from the sharp eye of the fish inspectors. Fusi fishes between three in the morning and dawn and often suffers great physical pain as a result of his labors, but he is cunningly determined to ward off the day when his self-righteous, gospelizing daughter Emma, who lives in his house with her husband, John, will have her way. ("Even in the darkness, he could see the distant steeple of the Lutheran church and the square bulk of the old folks' home that was directly across from his house. Emma, he thought grimly, would not be satisfied until he was safely trapped in one or carried out of the other.")

Valgardson describes Fusi's struggles and his contempt for the old folks' home in stark and sympathetic detail, then moves to a confrontation scene between the old man and his daughter. It ends with Fusi's visit to the kitchen of the home, where he presents the cook with his filleted fish, and Emma's vengeful arrival to deliver her knockout punch: she has told the fish inspectors about Fusi's illegal activities and their reply is that they have known all along. ("They've been watching you every morning just in case you should get into trouble and need help.") Fusi, shocked to his toes, tries to rush outside but Emma is in the way and he has to flee from her into the dining room of the home. "The Lord's work be done", says Emma piously, when the cook chides her.

The story is told simply, with an undercurrent of humor and a sure touch in its moments of high drama. The theme, man's imperative need for independence, is powerfully universal. The characters are convincing human beings yet. Valgardson cleverly endows them with attributes just a shade larger than life. (Emma was "tall and big boned with the square, pugnacious face of a bulldog. Every inch of her head would be crammed with metal curlers".) The setting is distinctive and inextricably linked with the lives of the characters; the import of each story is communicated strongly and directly, with a minimum of symbolism and introspection.

Important things happen in a Valgardson story. All but one of the stories in God Is Not a Fish Inspector occur at a time of extreme crisis in their characters' lives. Most of them also deal with some aspect of the theme of independence. One character loses it, when she is "saved" by the church; another sees a chance to gain it, when an act of omission will end her domineering husband's life; another learns how to cope with it, when his captain is lost in a shipwreck; another dies defending it while his two useless hired men demonstrate the erosion of it by modern welfare-statism.

There are 10 stories in God Is Not a Fish Inspector, only one of which could remotely be described as ending happily. Yet their effect is not depressing. On the whole, Valgardson's characters are masters of their own fates; they are able to choose much of what befalls them.

This fact may be almost enough to explain Valgardson's popular success as a short story writer today. His stories are not merely lively diversions; they have something honest to say about the human condition and they allow even the most ordinary of men a certain dignity.

GOD IS NOT A FISH INSPECTOR, by W. D. Valgardson. Oberon. $6.95. Paperback $3.50.

The First B.C. Giveaway

By TORCHY ANDERSON

During the considerable number of years that have passed since your reviewer was born in this province he has read a number of histories of British Columbia, including personal diaries of his family pioneers. Most of the formal histories have been honest and accurate, some of the magazine articles slightly hysterical.

It is, therefore, with gratitude that he finds the latest offering by the Akriggs, the first of two promised volumes, worthy of a place beside the top achievements on the subject. It is a book that is easy to read because of its organization, clarity and color.

BRITISH COLUMBIA CHRONICLE 1778-1846, by G. P. V. Akrigg and Helen B. Akrigg. Discovery Press. $14.95.

B.C. history needs no contrived excitement. It contains enough blood and guts and human frailty to outdo the most artificially contrived TV drama. Add to this a physical presentation of good type, good illustrations, the division of chapters by years, and you have a book that is easy to read and simple as a reference.

Like all history the B.C. story begins in legend and slowly emerges into the written record. The characters who sail, paddle, tramp and ride, number few would-be heroes. They were the kind who pressed forward to see what lay behind the next hill, headland and mountain range.

First in this notable procession came Cook, the poor English boy who won his way from deckhand on a North Sea coal barge into history as a great discoverer of distant seas. (Not forgetting that he discovered how to beat the most deadly of long voyage diseases — scurvy).

Then came Vancouver, the great navigator, a man whose charts excited the interest of one whose ambition was as wide as the world seas — Napoleon.

Overland came Simpson, complete with kilted bag-piper and the fastest paddlers from Quebec. His was a royal progress in the backwoods. Then McLaughlin, that giant of a man with a tinder-primed temper. His devotion to democracy, well hidden when he talked plausibly to the London directors, took him across the Columbia to the "Americans" and sad dissolution.

Just a rung below these giants on the ladder of history were brave men devoted to the "company", men well educated enough to leave many discerning records. There were too, scamps, drunkards and killers, but their total was small and their misdeeds minimal in effect.

This volume ends with the virtual gift of what is now Washington and Oregon, and quite possibly California, to an American government which bluffed a war-weary British government. As the authors note, Canada might have been as well balanced east to west as the U.S. is today.

The British had the power but, apparently, they didn't give a damn. Their thinking was that of Captain John Gordon who found the salmon would not take the fly and the deer hightailed it for the bush before he could fire. He, according to Roderick Finlayson of Fort Victoria, said he would not give one hill in Scotland for the whole of this country.

The history of B.C. is the story of what might have been.

Hebert: The Poet as Elitist, Spiritualist

By DAVID DAY

Although this is a slim volume of 43 poems, it is in fact the complete published poetry of Anne Hebert, from 1942 to 1960. When Poemes first appeared in French, it was immediately acclaimed and in 1961 was awarded the Governor-General's Award for poetry. No mention of this is made on the cover blurb, although it does mention her "two award-winning novels Kamouraska and The Silent Rooms" and the fact that Alan Brown received the Canada Council Translation award in 1974. I suspect the publishers are anxious to avoid the impression that they are asking new money for "old" poems. It is an unnecessary ploy (as is the photo of a woman who looks 30, but was born in 1916), for Hebert's poetry does not age.

POEMS, by Anne Hebert. Translated by Alan Brown. Musson. $5.95.

Alan Brown has done an exceptional job in this translation. The poems come to the English with clarity and freshness. The language is clean and unmuddled, the metaphors and images are translated without confusion. The much lauded precision of Hebert's poetry is accurately conveyed.

It seems amazing that Anne Hebert's considerable reputation as a poet is based on such a small quantity of work, but her stature is the result of an obsession with the quality of her poems. In her statement on poetry that prefaces the second half of Poems, Hebert gives us her view:

"As for myself, I believe in the virtue of poetry, I believe in the salvation that comes from every word that is precise, that has been lived and then expressed. I believe in solitude broken like bread by poetry."

Both Hebert's aesthetic and her stance as a poet are uncompromisingly elitist and intensely spiritual. She is not "plain folks," she believes in the function of poetry with religious intensity. She feels that one is "called" to the vocation, and that it necessarily entails great burdens of isolation and suffering. She maintains that one must also choose to embrace that mission. In the poem "Turn Back" she advises that this is the only way to advance:

"Visit your buried heart
Travel on your hand's lines
They are as good as pathways of the world
Or the wide sea's torment"

She advocates a descent into the self to a desolate solitude that can only be broken by the redeeming power of poetry. Hebert sees the poet as medium, as priest, as martyr. One who is chosen for a Christ-like mission and through whom the world may be redeemed.

In Hebert's poems we are immediately struck by the stark symbolic landscape. We never mistake her world for a naturalistic one. We move into a spare poetry that is refreshingly clean, clearly defined, exact. The images are consistent and unavoidable. My immediate association is with the paintings of her fellow Quebecois artist, Lemieux, who places figures on barren landscapes or a flat gold background. This technique forces the viewer into a symbolic reading of the image, as if we were viewing a Byzantine ikon or nativity.

ANNE HEBERT . . . optimistic despair

Similarly in Anne Hebert's poems we are in a world where only significant objects exist, symbolic objects, things that are many ways translatable. One realizes from the very first that this is an inward spiritual journey.

"Who can have thought this room?
In what quiet moment
Dreamed this low ceiling
The small green table and the tiny knife
The ebony bed
And the rose of fire
Swollen in its purple skirts
Around the heart possessed and guarded
Under blue and orange flames?
Who took the measure
Of the trembling cross of my stretched arms?"

We are constantly drawn into a place of isolation and despair. Sometimes it is a sealed room, a barren landscape, a desolate city, but always the images recur and are consistent: water (fountains, rivers, pools, rain, tears), hands, mirrors, the bird, the child, the knife, the wall, the fire, the tree (the cross), the garden. One may view the poet-pilgrim on behalf of mankind moving through tableau after tableau of suffering toward a redeeming vision. Like Oedipus, Hebert's bird (the poet) sees light only after being blinded: ". . . this bird — Trembles and turns toward morning — His punctured eyes." Ultimately one realizes that Hebert's view of the world is optimistic and that poetry is an expression that allows a return to life and a way to embrace humanity. With Camus she argues: "A literature of despair is a contradiction in terms."

WILD IMAGININGS OF CHILDHOOD

By MARGARET MINTER

Anyone who remembers the spine-chilling fantasies of childhood or who has watched and listened to their own children's make-believe situations will find this book amusing and thought-provoking.

Is it all really a game? Perhaps childish imaginations are more true to life than most adults think. This is the impression which Cicely Louise Evans conveys in her latest novel, The Saint Game.

THE SAINT GAME, by Cicely Louise Evans. Doubleday. $6.95.

The story, set in the early 1920s, revolves around an upper-class family — the Browns — father, mother, her brother Uncle Walker of dubious morals, and three daughters.

EVANS . . . with humor

Dorothea, Doff for short, is in her teens and obviously far removed from the excitable giggles and girlish pranks of her two younger sisters Annesley and Esther. They start playing the saint game when Annesley finds a book about saints during a dull Saturday afternoon's rummaging through forbidden cupboards.

Many parts of the book leave unanswered questions in their immature minds and they try to find the answers by approaching the maids, another forbidden pastime.

Their flights of fancy into sainthood have disastrous results and it is Uncle Walker with all his worldly failings who suffers. The two girls decide to forego the saint game. "It's too goofy. How about If I Had a Million Dollars. I'll begin," and off they go on another will-o-the-wisp fantasy seemingly unaware of the havoc they have created.

The author has a talent for understanding and interpreting the workings of a child's mind and throughout the story her sense of humor lends color to every situation. The girls' attempts to make hair shirts out of old potato sacks so that they can wear them for Lent is particularly amusing. It is to Evans' credit that she has written a readable and enjoyable story which sometimes deals with delicate subjects without resorting to the use of obscene language.

Cicely Louise Evans has written two other novels, The Newel Post and The Nemesis Wife. She is the other of four children and makes her home in Victoria.

Sci-Fi in Poetic, Literate Prose

By JENI COUZYN

There are some prose writers who are determined, against all tone-deafness, linear-mindedness, and musical apathy, to be poets. They doggedly write in the short line, fretting about where their line-endings should come, what forms their poems should take, how they should use assonance and rhyme. Their pieces of writing are forever confined within the laborious, and often, the irrelevant. Theirs are the kind of poems one wants to say "So what" after — like those angular-limbed walkers who labor and distort their bodies to walk quickly, when they could just as well run.

There is a second kind of prose writer who longs for poetry. This is the writer who loves words, loves them so much he can't gloss over any syllable without examining it, who can't resist crossing out "the's" and "and's," making puns, contriving images. He is the writer who will use words like "saprophytic" seven times in one novel, and who'll invent words like "nubby" to describe grass. Science fiction has been attracting a great deal of this kind of poetic, super-literate prose of late, and Samuel R. Delaney is its most dedicated exponent.

Like Dune and Stranger in a Strange Land, Dhalgren has become a cult book overnight. And in all the enthusiasm of SF's recent leap into intellectual respectability, Dhalgren's fans persistently describe it as "a magnificent PROSE-POEM."

Predictably then, Dhalgren is based on the theme of an unstable reality that keeps shifting and tilting. Predictably, its hero doesn't know his own name. Predictably, he writes poems. And inevitably, the text is crammed with long discussions about the nature of art. The story is set in a disintegrating city — for some unexplained reason continuously on fire and billowing smoke, though never burning down. Law and order has collapsed and the inhabitants drift through their lives in whatever way pleases them. The city contains: scorpions (hells angels); aristocracy as the rich and intelligent; a commune of innocents; a homo-sexual night-club dancer; a black ghetto; a psychiatrist; the bourgeoisie with all their respectability and hidden vices; an astronaut; a blind-mute; a cult-figure hero — you name it, Bellona has got it.

Delaney's Dhalgren Latest Cult Book

And this seems to me one of the basic problems with the book. There is too much in it. Almost without plot or character-development it labors on for 900 pages while Delaney, like a brilliant guest at a dinner party, gives us his opinion about absolutely everything: what it's like to be mentally ill; the old emotions-vs-chemicals debate; the evils of sexism; the effects of the moon-landing on our perspective of earth; the expense-vs-the-starving-masses-in-India argument, and so on interminably.

Delaney seems to me a writer burdened with an unmanageably intellectual mind — a ferocious intelligence that has usurped his judgment to the point where he achieves neither the clarity of detachment nor the intensity of involvement. Here, for example, the hero, mumbling and stuttering with appropriate gaucheness, meets the "established poet" and shows him his poems: "I guess what I want to know really . . . Do you think these . . . that these are any good? . . . I mean really?" and Delaney can't resist the answer. Unfortunately, without exception in this book, it's a long one:

"You have no realization what an absurd question that is . . . I really cannot think of poetry in such absolute terms as 'good' and 'bad,' or even in the more flexible terms you'd probably be willing to accept in their place: 'well done' or 'badly done.' Perhaps it is because I suffer from all the aesthetic diseases of the times which cause the worthless to be praised and the worthy to be ignored. Well, they have ravaged all ages. But you must leave open the possibility that poetry means far too much to me to vulgarize it in the way you are asking me to do . . ." and so on for many many more pages.

Perhaps, to some extent aware of his top-heavy intellect himself, Delaney has studded the metaphysical writhings of the pages with lots of brutal he-man activity: gangs beating people up; his hero with ugly calloused hands picking his nose and eating the snot; digging greasy meat out of cans with "blunt" fingers and shovelling it into his "bubbling" stomach; lots of brutal sex, gang-bangings, knives and leather vests and heroic exploits.

However, it is beyond these extraordinary passages that Delaney emerges at his best. Forgetting about defining art or reality, when Delaney writes about sex he plunges into some of the most erotic writing I have ever read — though absurdly overdone in its fanatical detail and often grotesque in its determination not to be sentimental, it nevertheless works. By this I mean that it turns me on — in the way that Picasso's erotic gravures turn me on — it arouses physical pleasure in me as I read it.

The bi-sexual hero not only does a great deal of "balling," he also gets involved in an intense 3-cornered love relationship with a woman and a boy, and in the unreal city they keep finding and losing each other with all the tenderness and desperation of the recognizable world. At these times I found myself relaxing into the story with unqualified enjoyment.

Discordant Notes In U.S. Concert

WASHINGTON (CP) — Several hundred modern music buffs attended a Friday night concert by the Societe de Musique Contemporaine du Quebec at the John Kennedy Centre for the Performing Arts, and many left before the concert ended.

Contemporary music by Canadian and internatonal composers clearly was not everyone's cup of tea.

The Quebec contemporary music society conducted by Serge Garant, one of its founders in 1966, has a big following in Montreal and Quebec province among young people seeking pleasure in something modern.

Its concert here as part of the Canadian salute to the U.S. Independence Bicentennial was a substitution on the program for pianist Oscar Peterson.

And while the 2,700-seat concert hall, the biggest auditorium of the four in the centre, was suitable for the big sound of contemporary music, the crowd that attended was small.

The program opened with Garrant's Circuit I, scored for six percussion players without a conductor.

The other Canadian work on the program was Gilles Tremblay's Champs I I-Scuffles, for a mixture of brass, woodwind and percussion with Raoul Sosa, Argentine-born pianist now teaching in Montreal, at the piano.

At one point in the Tremblay composition—such is the nature of contemporary music—the brass and woodwind instruments gathered around the open grand piano to fire one blast of sound, which was picked up in reverberation by the piano strings.

Two works by foreign composers were Couleurs de la Cite Celeste by the noted Parisien organist Olivier Messiaen, composed in 1963, and Deserts, by Edgar Varese.

SUCH RAPT ATTENTION concentrated on an ordinary cardboard carton must surely mean its content is of drastic importance to, left to right, Clayton Jeune, John Palmer and Barbara Shaw. But to divulge its secret before the play, Moonchildren, does so would be unfair. All will be known by those who attend the production now on stage at UVic's Phoenix Theatre until Nov. 1, with curtain at 8 p.m. Ticket reservations, 477-4821.

'ORGANIC DANCE'

A workshop of sacred dance entitled Participation Concert will be presented for two days at Open Space Theatre, 510 Fort.

The event taking place Friday and Saturday and commencing at 7 p.m. will be under the guidance of Irmaine Earnshaw. Born in Persia, Ms. Earnshaw began dancing there and eventually went to the United States where she studied with Elva Peterson, a disciple of Isadora Duncan.

The workshops are based on Egyptian sacred dances and are intended, she says, "to draw from each person a dance that is an event in poetry . . . the unique dance of each individual."

Registration is limited to 25 people per workshop. Those interested can pre-register by calling 383-8833 between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. on weekdays.

Poetry Reading

Readings by Alexander Hutchison from his own work and that of others, including Whitman, Roethke and Yeats, and with David Jones the Tao Te Ching and Paracelsus, will take place Monday at UVic's MacLaurin Auditorium.

Sponsored by the Department of English speakers' committee, the reading will begin at 12:30 p.m. All interested may attend.

Busy Week for Art Lovers

Art lovers will be attracted to a variety of exhibitions during the coming week, including the Saanich Peninsula Arts and Crafts exhibition and sale of paintings at Hillside Mall, Monday through Saturday.

At Victoria Art Gallery, 1040 Moss, the Art of Onisaburo Deguchi and his school ends Sunday and the gallery goes into preparation for the annual Craftsmen and Artists at Work show which begins Nov. 6.

On Tuesday art historian Dr. Toru Mori will give an illustrated lecture at the gallery on realism in the Japanese early medieval period, sculpture and portrait painting.

The Emily Carr Arts Centre, 207 Government, is presenting a course in Chinese art for beginners and intermediates. The instructor will be Josephine Baker, a student of the late Stephen Lowe.

The course will be given Tuesdays, 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m., and Fridays, 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. Registrations at Carr Centre or call 382-4922 between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Open Space Gallery, 506 Fort, will have recent paintings by Bill Porteous, Monday through Nov. 15. Show will open at 8 p.m. Monday.

At the Agghazy Gallery, 1016 Fort, an exhibition and sale of original oils by Bruce Cryer will take place Nov. 3 - 12. Cryer's work comes into the realm of Canadian high realism.

Collage and fabric artist Carole Sabiston will have a show of her recent assemblages at the Backroom Gallery, 2070 Oak Bay, together with pottery by Byron Johnstadt. The show will open Tuesday and run through Nov. 8.

UVic Band at Oak Bay

Victoria Symphony first bassoon Jesse Read will conduct the University of Victoria concert band when it appears at Oak Bay Junior Secondary auditorium Thursday.

Also on the program will be the UVic Percussion Ensemble and Brass Choir conducted by the symphony's percussion leader, John Smith. Both conductors are members of the university's music faculty.

For the band part of the program Read has chosen works by Vaughan Williams, Persichetti, Wagner, Milhaud and Fisher.

Tickets for the concert are available from Oak Bay Junior band members and at UVic music department or will be on sale at the door. The concert begins at 8 p.m.

When Hollywood Was Glossy, Glamorous

By TOM DONNELY

They sure knew how to cook up peachy movie plots in 1926. "The Taxi Dancer," was one of the early moments in the protracted career of Joan Crawford. Crawford played Joslyn, "a 10-cents-a-dance" girl in love with a gigolo, whom she tried to save from a murder rap by offering herself to a millionaire. However, as one of the subtitles explains. 'He is convinced of Joslyn's purity when she refuses u cocktail before dinner.' Now isn't that the bee's knees?

This report on "The Taxi Dancer" comes from a new book that's a real smasher: "The MGM Story; The Complete History of Fifty Roaring Years" by John Douglas Eames, who has covered 1,705 films, all the movies MGM made or released from 1924 to 1974. Eames gives a clear idea of the content and general tone of each film. He has a real talent for putting a story in a nutshell, which is where hundreds of these stories belong.

Eames provides cast lists and production credits, tells how the picture did at the box-office, and works in interesting bits of incidental information. For example, "The Life of Marion Davies was like an MGM movie, so what could be more logical than to film her 1930 musical 'The Floradora Girl' in her own home? That is, in one of her homes."

There are superb examples from every decade. ZaSu Pitts and an actress named Dale Fuller meeting at a backyard fence in "Greed" and creating an impression of madness and desperation so strong your impulse is to turn that page fast. For high-minded romance there's John Gilbert, all fiery vitality, in the arms of the indestructibly

CRAWFORD
. . . adoring males

ethereal Lillian Gish: a close-up from "La Boheme."

In the quaint novelty department I give you the Duncan Sisters of "Topsy and Eva" fame, all done up for a duet in an early talkie: blonde pigtails, ribbons, rosettes and sugary smiles. Women of mature years trying to come on like Shirley Temple. "Their personalities tended to cloy on screen," says Eames.

Who's that naked lady only somewhat concealed by flower petals in that Oriental bathtub? Why, it's Myrna Loy, ordinarily one of the most fully dressed women on the screen. The picture was "The Barbarian" (1933), a romantic trip down the Hollywood Nile that temporarily halted Romon Novarro's slide from public favor.

Eames points to a study of Joan Crawford embracing Robert Montgomery while extending an encouraging hand to Franchot Tone as "The MGM look personified"; an Adrian gown and two adoring males for Crawford, Oliver Marsh lighting for all. But the MGM look is on display again and again in this book: Crawford and Garbo and Gable and Harlow and Turner and Taylor, all looking impossibly glossy and glamorous.

If readers (except historians) will never have heard of a lot of the MGM movies described in the early pages of this book, they won't have heard of a lot of the movies produced by the studio in the '70s. "My Lover, My Son?" "Corky?" "Chandler?" "Believe In Me?" "The Wrath of God?" "Nightmare Honeymoon?"

After five generally lively decades Leo the Lion had nothing to roar about . . .

"The MGM Story" is a wow, but a couple of drawbacks must be mentioned: The book is flimsily bound, and a 15-page color section devoted to Metro's muscials is a positive eyesore. Such offshades wouldn't have turned up in a Republic special.

MUSIC AWARD WINNERS IN CONCERT

Three top scholarship winners will be presented in a Victoria Musical Art Society recital, Nov. 2 at McPherson Playhouse.

The three — Gwen Hoebig, Rolf Gilstein and Walter Prossnitz — are in fact multiple award winners who have already attracted attention beyond the city and island.

Musical Art's prime purpose is to encourage young artists and provide them with the opportunity to perform on the public concert platform.

Gwen Hoebig, 15-year-old Vancouver born violinist, was this year's CBC Talent Award winner for strings in Montreal and also a prize-winner in the Quebec Concours.

She has been a consistent winner in Vancouver and Victoria music festivals and has won both provincial and national championships. She has studied under Steven Staryk in Vancouver and Sydney Humphreys and Harry Cawood at the Victoria Conservatory of Music. At the forthcoming concert she will play the Brahms Violin Sonata in

GILSTEIN
. . . second in Canada

D minor with Robin Wood at the piano.

A Victoria native son, 20-year-old cellist Rolf Gilstein placed second in Canada this year in the National Music Festival in Toronto. He is a pupil of James Hunter at the Conservatory and has also studied with Janos Starker at Shawnigan Lake Summer School and in Los Angeles on a Congress of Strings full scholarship. He was principal cellist with the orchestra at L.A. and again in 1974 was principal of the National Youth Orchestra. At present he is in his fourth year at the University of Victoria, where he is majoring in music performance. He will be partnered at the piano by Sandra Hunt in Haydn's Cello Concerto in D.

Walter Prossnitz is also Victoria-born and 15 years old. He started playing the piano at the age of seven and at 10 was accepted as a pupil by Robin Wood. Among his many awards have been music festival championships, scholarships to study in Vienna in 1973 and at the Shaw Festival at Niagara-on-the-Lake in 1974 and 75. In '73 he also won the Royal Conservatory of Music of Toronto's silver medal for Grade 10. He plays frequently on radio and television. Walter's contribution to the program will consist of the Six Rumanian Dances of Bela Bartok, three Etudes by Chopin, and Liszt's La Vallee d'Obermann.

All three young artists have been soloists with Victoria Symphony Orchestra in out-of-town concerts.

The Musical Art Society concert will begin at 2:30 p.m. and tickets will be available in the theatre foyer.

Comfort Sued

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dr. Alex Comfort, author of The Joy of Sex and More Joy of Sex is being sued for $3.08 million by the Centre for the Study of Democratic Institutions. A centre spokesman said the federal suit contends Comfort wrote More Joy of Sex a sequel to the other book, to induce prospective purchasers to bypass the first book, allowing Comfort to avoid sharing its proceeds. The centre was to receive 20 per cent of the proceeds of the first book, but was left out of any share from the sequel.

Provincial government and farm spokesmen, angered by public statements by University of Victoria economist Dr. Leonard Laudadio that farmers are gaining at the expense of the consumer during the present inflation, requested a face-to-face meeting this week with the professor to refute his charges.

This story is the result of their confrontation.

Are Farmers Getting Rich At Consumers' Cost?

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

University of Victoria economic department chairman Dr. Leonard Laudadio clashed with provincial department of agriculture officials this week over whether farmers are getting rich at the expense of the consumer.

George Pearson, director of policy development and planning for the provincial department of agriculture said farmers are merely catching up after years of low income.

"They are doing more than catching up," Laudadio replied. "Some of them are taking in large amounts of money with no increase in effort or production."

The occasion was a face-to-face debate between Laudadio and provincial agricultural spokesmen at the B.C. Federation of Agriculture headquarters on Broughton.

At issue was a public statement made by Laudadio that, in the past four years, the increase in the price of food was the major reason for double-digit inflation and farmers were getting rich at the expense of the consumers.

Supporting Laudadio at the debate was Dr. Robert Cherneff, a member of Laudadio's economic department.

On the other side of the table were Pearson and Roy Wilkinson, director of production and marketing services for the B.C. department of agriculture. Chairman was Robert Reynolds, president of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture.

Also attending in defence of the farm community were Ralph Barichello, Richard Stocks, Jack Wessel and Robin Glen, all of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture. The federation had requested the meeting.

Laudadio defended his public statement that farmers were gaining at the expense of consumers but said it needed elaboration.

About 20 per cent of Canadian farmers account for 60 per cent of farm revenue and it is this group that is profiting from present high prices, he said.

Laudadio said he would agree that the small farmer can be very poor—in worse circumstances than the urban poor. He also said he would agree that before 1971 farmers were not doing well but now some of them were gaining windfall income as a result of high prices.

The farm spokesmen replied that there is no evidence of a significant flow of wealth to the farm community. In addition, it was unfair to only consider the income of the past four years when farmers had done so poorly for the previous 20 years.

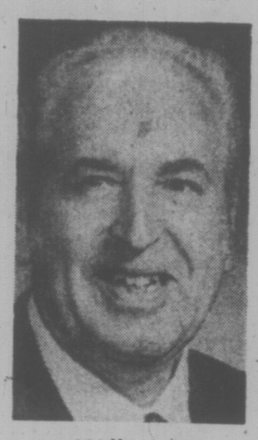
Laudadio replied that they were letting value judgements about right or wrong enter an argument about whether it were true that the farmer's share of income was increasing.

"If you want to argue about justice, I will talk about that. But the point is, is it true? The truth is farm net income has tripled in the past three years."

He said in 1970 farm net income accounted for only 2.1 per cent of all Canadian personal disposable income.

By 1973, the farmer's share had risen to 4.4 per cent. He said this demonstrates a flow of wealth to the farm community from the non-farm community.

Pearson angrily disputed the claim, saying that net farm income is not the same thing as disposable income. He said net farm income includes wages, return on capital investment and a management fee.



Wilkinson

Pearson

Cherneff

"You are making a fundamental error in calling net farm income as income," Pearson said.

"Because net farm income includes a return on the farmer's capital investment, you cannot use the figure to compare with anything."

Laudadio replied: "That's a stupid position. If you cannot compart it (net farm income) with anything, you cannot say anything about agriculture and I refuse to accept that position."

Pearson replied that the only fair figure to use would be the amount of disposable income for family use available to the farmer compared with income available to other workers—but this type of figure is not available.

Laudadio repeated that the figures available show a flow of wealth to the farms in the past four years, especially for the 20 per cent of farmers who run large operations.

Wilkinson of the provincial department of agriculture said prices have increased fairly sharply in the past two years but this was part of a common trend of farm prices being the last to rise during an inflationary period and often the first to fall. He said there is evidence food prices are starting to decline already.

Laudadio conceded food prices had been slow to rise before 1971 but during the period under discussion, from 1971 to the present time, farm prices have increased sharply, not as a result of increased demand, but mainly due to contrived conditions, along with some selected higher costs.

The contrived conditions, he said, were the result of what Ottawa calls "negative supply management," and involves reducing farm production to increase the price of food. This is the basic cause of Canada's inflation, he said.

Laudadio said he has praise for the provincial governments income insurance programs, which have the full support of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture, because the provincial program distributes funds to the small farmer and does not add unduly to the wealth of the large farmer. By contrast, he said, restrictive policies of the federal government force the price of food up and result in large net farm incomes for large farm producers.

Wessel, of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture, said it was very dangerous for Laudadio to make public statements that farmers were making profits at the expense of the consumer without more evidence to support his argument.

Laudadio replied that Ottawa had reduced Canadian wheat acreage 50 per cent in a single year to force up the price of wheat, which subsequently went from $2 a bushel to over $6. That was not to the benefit of the consumer.

Wessel replied that, while there was less land for wheat, there was more land for cattle and hogs as a result of the cutback. The price of beef has declined as a result of increased production. The price of pork declined in 1973 as a result of the expansion in hog numbers, following the wheat cutback.

Wessel said there are no present restrictions on production of cattle, grains or industrial milk.

Laudadio said while there may not be volume restrictions, there were artificial price levels in milk that harmed rather than helped the Canadian consumer. Milk is exported from Canada and sold at much lower levels than it is sold in this country (and a similar picture exists in egg marketing, he said). And while farmers say they are producing as much milk as consumers want, they neglect to say that they are selling it at a fixed rpice.

"There are many Canadians who cannot afford to buy as much milk as they want. Don't talk to me about consumer demand. Lower the price and they will buy more."

Laudadio said the three central questions were whether food was the major factor in inflation, whether funds were flowing to the farm sector of the economy and what should be done to assist the farmer without restricting production.

The meeting attempted to resolve the first two questions, agreeing in advance that the third one on federal and provincial government policies would probably require a separate meeting as it involved value judgements as well as questions of fact.

Laudadio said food accounts for 70 per cent of all of Canada's inflation. This was 50 per cent in direct cost plus another 20 percentage points for an indirect factor.

Laudadio said the indirect factors were the influence of other costs. For example, some of the increase in the cost of housing and clothing can be traced to food costs: Workers see food prices rising and so they demand very high wages in the housing and clothing industry (for example) and these wage costs must be attributed in part to the price of food.

Pearson rejected the process, saying that, by similar means, other sectors could be said to influencing the price of food and the resulting index will be much higher than 100 per cent, which was an untenable result.

Laudadio said there was no way a person could argue that the cost of housing was increasing the price of food but it was easy to see that increasing food bills were forcing up wages that in turn resulted in more inflation.

He said food accounts for 27 per cent of the average family budget, increasing as income declines. For example, a family with income less than $6,000 per year would spend 70 per cent of it on food.

He insisted that food costs account for 70 per cent of all inflation (because of the high proportion of family income that goes to grocery bills).

The spokesmen for the farm community continued to insist it was very much lower than 70 per cent.

There was no agreement on the second point, either, with Pearson insisting it was very difficult to measure disposable farm income as distinct from total net farm income. Wilkinson said farm incomes had been so low for so long that whatever gains had been made in the past two or three years were not enough to compensate for former years of low income.

B.C. Federation of Agriculture president Reynolds said in general the federation support provincial agricultural policies, particularly in regards to the income insurance programs, but has reserved judgement on federal agricultural policies because it is not sure what direction Ottawa is heading.

Laudadio replied he agreed the provincial farm program is excellent and his quarrel is with Ottawa. He said federal policy is to restrict production and he opposed that.

The confrontation ended with Reynolds inviting Laudadio to join with the federation in preparing statistical data so farm costs and income could be measured more reliably than at present.

Laudadio said he would be pleased to confer with B.C. Federation of Agriculture officials on that question and he would waive his usual consultation fee.

Both sides smiled and shook hands, agreeing the confrontation had been useful, even if there was still disagreement over who was to blame.

RAISES GIVEN UP

MIAMI (UPI) — Eastern Airlines pilots say they have agreed to forego pay raises next year and to fly 10 more hours monthly in exchange for a promise by company president Frank Borman to let them share in future profits.

The Air Line Pilots Association Friday thus became the first of Eastern's three major employee unions to adopt the former astronaut's cost-cutting proposals for trimming $75 million from the financially-troubled carrier's operating costs over the next two years.

Borman had proposed that Eastern's 32,000 employees forego increases next year in exchange for a five-year profit-sharing agreement which would give them one-third of any net profit made by the airline.

For instance, a bathtub safety rail, or an adjustable bath seat to make bathing a little easier and safer? . . . Surgical Supplies have a new shipment of these, in three different styles, as well as a new kind that fastens right onto the wall . . . Another thought is a rocker foot and leg rest which adjusts automatically to the most comfortable position . . . Maybe a raised toilet seat would be a boon to someone with arthritis . . . The Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: I just got a Shetland pony colt at a real bargain because he'd had choke a couple of times. This choke, I understand, is some kind of a sore throat that doesn't last too long. I was wondering, though, if it's contagious because I have a friend with a Shetland pony, too. — T.A.

DEAR T.A.: Choke is a descriptive term for a condition considerably more serious than a simple sore throat. In the equine it refers basically to an obstruction within the esophagus (gullet). It may last as long as the horse — but that may be only a few days. It may break up by itself within a day or two, or varying degrees of veterinary choke may be required to save the victim. Causes range from infection in the esophagus, or other conditions which may cause a narrowing of the passageway, to simply getting too much food into the throat at one time.

Eager equine eaters are more prone to have choke than those who chew their food more thoroughly. The condition is not contagious, but choke is more common in Shetland ponies because their esophagus is proportionately smaller for their size than that of other horses. Bolets (large pills) designed for use in horses (and cattle) are often a cause of choke in Shetland ponies since the pills are actually a bit too large for these small-throated horses to swallow easily. The pills may start down the throat and then become stuck, sometimes with fatal consequences. Since your pony has already shown a tendency toward these throat obstructions, from whatever cause, get a checkup and general care instructions from your veterinarian.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Is it possible that a budgie could really have diabetes? — A.B.

DEAR A.B.: Yes.

DEAR DR. MILLER: I'm hoping my Skippy puppy can get his TD early. It's the only obedience degree I really care about for him. A friend of mine whose dog has the utility title says you have to get that one first. What I want to know is, why? — S.L.

DEAR S.L.: Not so. You can train directly for your TD (tracking dog) title, and Skippy can get it at any age after six months that he can earn it. Some, in fact, have won their TD degree at six months of age, though this is exceptional.

DEAR DR. MILLER: My husband's finally convinced that Amorous, our male cat, shouldn't go around impregnating every female cat in the neighborhood, but he wants him to continue to have the fun of trying. You'd better believe Amorous has, up to now. He weighs 20 pounds. He's a lean, mean, fighting machine. He's the king around this neighborhood. My husband won't stand for castrating him, but what about vasectomy? Can't it be done on cats? — A.O.

DEAR A.O.: Yes, I've indicated that vasectomy can be done on felines and for Amorous it's probably the answer. Indeed, it might serve an added function of birth control for the neighborhood, since if he can stay awake 24 hours a day, he can keep the available females from being served by any other male, at least in his territory. As you've implied, a vasectomy in no way affects his ability except for fertility (nor does this substitute surgery suppress spraying, roaming and fighting, or anything but population).

DEAR DR. MILLER: Beckett, my parakeet, has a tiny lump on one wing. I'm going to have it looked at because I understand tumors are very common. Can you tell me, though, if this was a tumor whether or not it would be the dangerous kind? — W.J.

DEAR W.J.: You're right that tumors are common, particularly in parakeets. Unfortunately, most of them are malignant. This is why early detection of any potential tumor is important. Surgery is often successful, but only if the bird is brought in in time.

DEAR DR. MILLER: How many eggs can a goldfish lay? — G.W.

DEAR G.W.: Depends on the size of the fish. With a large female, up to 5,000 eggs per spawning are possible. Under ideal conditions, a female may spawn as many as six times in one season.

DEAR DR. MILLER: We've had all three of our pets for a long time, but are wondering which we'll be able to keep the longest: the dog, crow, or pigeon? — K.F.

DEAR K.F.: Fortunately, all three are long-lived pets, so it could depend to a considerable extent on how old they all are now. Crows occasionally make it past 15, but not often. Both pigeons and dogs may make it into their 20's or, occasionally, make it past the 30-year mark.

DEAR DR. MILLER: I have a chance to buy, by mail, a very good young Pomeranian. The doctor's report said the puppy is in good health, but has epiphora which, I understand, is an eye disease. Our last dog, a poodle, had a lot of eye problems and I'm afraid to get into that with a Pomeranian. Just how serious is epiphora, anyway? Are Pomeranians prone to eye problems? I'd sure hate to get into all that again. — S.S.

DEAR S.S.: With the exception of epiphora, which refers to excess tearing causing those streaks below the inner corners of the eyes, Pomeranians tend to have very few eye problems. Poodles are prone not only to epiphora, but to other far more serious eye problems.

IT'S DIFFICULT to know who's got whose number, but it's safe to say there's mutual affection between Sandi Sanford, 8, of Toronto and her 10-week-old pup Smokey.

Phrohy Dish From Ukraine

By MARY MOORE

QUESTION: My gentleman friend is foreign descent and of course loves foreign dishes. His mother, who passed away many years ago, used to make a food called "perogy" — pronounced (purr-oh-gee) but he does not know or have the recipe. I would like to try my luck at making this food. Could you please print the recipe for it? Thank you so very much. Recipe-Tryer-Lucy.

ANSWER: Lucy, you did not give your surname or address or enclose a stamped self-addressed envelope and 10 cents. I could have mailed this to you 6 weeks ago. The only reason I have consented to give it here is because we have many Ukrainian readers.

PYROHY
(with cottage cheese filling)

NOTE: To be served as a hearty soup accompaniment or with coffee.

1 tsp. sugar (first amount)
¼ cup lukewarm water
1 pkg. granular yeast
1 cup scalded milk
¼ cup shortening or butter
2 eggs, beaten
1½ tsp. salt
1 tbsp. sugar (second amount)
4½ to 5 cup sifted flour
Filling (see below)

Dissolve the 1 teaspoon sugar in the lukewarm water, sprinkle the yeast over it, and let it stand for 10 minutes. To the hot scalded milk add the butter or shortening and cool to lukewarm. Add the eggs, salt, 1 tablespoon sugar and yeast liquid. Mix in enough flour to make a medium soft dough as for bread — about 4½ cups. Knead on floured board until smooth and satiny. Return to bowl, cover, and let rise until double in bulk. Punch down, knead a few times in the bowl and let rise again. Cut off small egg-sized pieces of dough and roll ¼" thick. Place a generous portion of cottage cheese filling (see below) in the centre, bring the edges together and press to SEAL secupely.

Cottage Cheese Filling: One pound DRY cottage cheese, 1 tablespoon thick sour cream, 2 eggs beaten, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon chopped dill pickle, if desired. Press the cottage cheese through a sieve or mash it well. Add the remaining ingredients and mix thoroughly. Shape pyrohy into an oblong with a plump centre and tapering ends. Dip them after they are filled and shaped into melted butter. Place, sealed side down, on a greased baking sheet, spacing them 1 to 1½" apart. Cover and let them rise in a warm place until light and doubled. Bake at 375 deg. Fahr. for 30 to 35 minutes, depending on their size.

Medical authorities in all parts of the world have long been concerned at the side effects that have shown up following the regular use of aspirin. People have been admitted to hospital with stomach bleeding and kidney damage among other things. For some time now we have had aspirin-free pain relievers on the market, available without prescription for home use. It's hard to change from something you've known for years but we do feel you should ask your pharmacist to show you aspirin-free analgesics in tablet and liquid form for simple fever, colds and headaches, etcetera. Film-Maker Gets His Chances To Travel, See the World

elizabeth forbes

When a young Herb Taylor joined the National Film Board, at the end of the Second World War, he was eager to travel and to see the world.

He had been foiled in a first attempt to realize that dream.

"I joined the Canadian air force as soon as I was old enough to get in," he told me when he was in Victoria briefly a short time ago," but the war was over almost as soon as I made it. So I figured the next best thing was the film board."

Today, he is a professional film-maker with his own company, working through — and with — Crawley Films of Ottawa, a pioneer film company with 35 years experience.

In the years between he has produced several hundred films and he has travelled to many far-off places in the world.

When I talked to him he was just back from Rivers Inlet where he had been making a film on sports salmon fishing, commissioned by Outboard Marine of Peterborough, Ont.

On that trip and on a preliminary one made a few weeks ago, he had an assistant and a sound man with him. They stayed, both times, in a lodge that was once a cannery and Taylor, as producer, director and camera man says "we had all the co-operation in the world."

Earlier this year he was in the Arctic, at Koluktoo Bay on the north coast of Baffin Island, working with Dr. Joe McInnis, a diving buddy of Prime Minister Trudeau, and well-known for his TV features and scientific films about the far north.

"We were there to find the narwhals with their ivory tusks, to swim with them, dive with them, and film them under water," Taylor told me.

The party, including Dr. McInnis' son, 12 years, and a nephew, 13, as well as photographers for surface and under-water work (one of them from National Geographic) had to wear a special type of dry suit to withstand the ice-cold water.

"Even with those suits on, it was extremely cold," Taylor remembered with a slight shiver, "and while we never did get down to measuring, it must have been close to freezing all the time."

Story of the narwhals was woven around a father and son expedition and during the filming, Prime Minister Trudeau flew in from Resolute, where he was vacationing, got into a dry suit and went down with the divers.

"He could easily be in the finished film," Taylor says, "although it will be almost impossible to pick him out among the divers . . . they all looked alike in those suits."

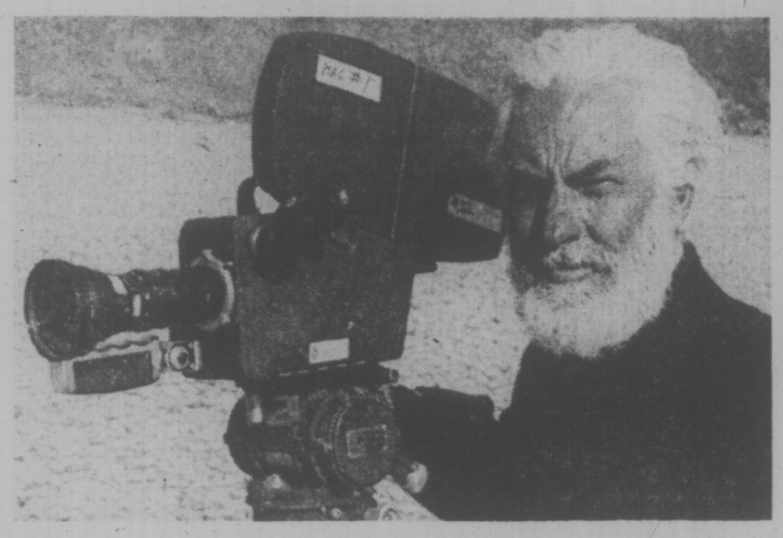
Herb has had his own company now for over 20 years.

There are two other film-makers with him.

"We work on shifts . . . sometimes two men . . sometimes all three together. Then, at times, we break off and go out on our own."

He has been three times to the Arctic, once for the National Film Board, once free-lancing and now, with Dr. McInnis.

Just about the time he left the film board to work on his own, Herb married Florence Lorinde, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Lorinde of this city, a former member of the Victoria Daily Times editorial staff then working for the Ottawa Citizen.



Taylor . . . Trudeau diving buddy

Immediately they set off to "put Europe on film," and in the year or so they were over there, a son, Lawrence, was born in London, England.

When that phase of film-making was over, the Taylors went off to Indonesia, where he was assigned to teach visual aids in education for UNESCO.

In the year they were there, second son Michael was born. (Both boys are now in their mid-teens.)

Last year Taylor went back to Indonesia to shoot a film for Cal-Tex, (a Texaco-Standard Oil subsidiary), "which will be shown mainly in the United States and in Europe, where they sell most of their gas."

Despite the fact that he is travelling and filming at a fairly steady pace, he says that, at the moment, "the film business in Canada, mainly because of economic conditions, is as uncertain as it has ever been."

There was a time when film-makers had a steady input from making instructional films for big companies.

"Today those same companies have their own small video machines and they produce their own instructions."

However, the country is developing and new areas are opening up, he says. And, with the federal government's recent emphasis on more Canadian films, there is a new challenge.

The big question with that challenge, as Taylor sees it, is whether the Canadian public will accept Canadian films in theatres where they must pay money to see them.

In the past year or so a few good Canadian feature films have been made "but they have not really caught on."

Film-makers therefore, must learn a whole new set of rules, he says, "to understand the general public's likes and dislikes . . . it's a big, big challenge."

In the meantime Herb Taylor still likes to travel with his camera on his arm.

Only thing he has against it now is that, so often, he must leave his wife and sons at home in Toronto.

When he came down from Rivers Inlet this time, Florence did fly out and join him here and they had a short visit with her parents.

"That doesn't happen very often," he told me.

The four-page folder Drinking, Drugs and Driving reports the results of a recent study carried out by an independent laboratory in conjunction with Canada's National Research Council.

The experiments prove that mixing alcohol and drugs, even common cough remedies or painkillers, can be deadly. Drivers not only endanger their own lives, but also those of their passengers and other users of the road. The study also shows that the impaired driver probably does not even realize the state he is in till it is too late.

The folder urges you never to drive a car, a snowmobile or a boat, and probably not even a bicycle, if you have taken medication and had a drink. You may have to pay for your folly with your life.

Marijuana was found to have the same dangerous effect as medication.

dear abby

Forceful Husband

DEAR ABBY: I'm going straight to the point of my problem. What does a married woman do when her husband rapes her — which happened to me?

After my assault, I ran to a neighbor's house and called the police. After they arrived and asked the customary questions, they told me it was impossible for a husband to rape "his" wife! They also told me I must have a screw loose to call the police for such a complaint, but I didn't know what else to do after having been repeatedly raped for hours.

The definition of rape is forcibly having sexual intercourse with a girl or woman without her consent. It says nothing about her being married or single. Now, because of the way the police sided with my husband, he thinks that I am crazy.

First, I want you to know that in the 10 years of our marriage, I have never refused my husband's advances. If anything, he has been the one with the bedtime "headaches." I thoroughly enjoyed our sex life. As a matter of fact, I didn't even understand the complete meaning of sex until I met this man. To me, it was the most beautiful way to express the ultimate in mutual love and understanding.

Now, since this rape, I can't bring myself to feel as I formerly did. However, I'm sticking with him, hoping I'll be able to forgive and forget.

Can you understand my feelings? Or am I really crazy?

GOLD-BANDED RAPEE

DEAR RAPEE: You most certainly are not crazy, and I can understand your feelings. The legal definition of rape is "the illicit carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent." This makes it legally impossible for a man to rape his wife, but it is still morally wrong for a husband to force himself physically upon his wife. And let's hope that archaic law changes soon.

DEAR ABBY: When I read the letter from FLAT, I felt I should reply.

One of my best friends is 14, and she's also flat, but she's the most popular girl with the boys at the parties we have.

She may be flat, but she has a wonderful personality, and people just love to be around her. She's very kind and never puts anybody down and is the kind of person who makes friends right away with girls and boys, too.

Sure, there are a lot of boys who just want a girl for her body, but who needs a guy like that?

I'm 14, 5-foot-8, 119 lbs. and don't have much of a bust either, but it doesn't bother me a bit because the right kind of boy won't care. — FLAT AND HAPPY.

DEAR ABBY: May I give FLAT a little advice?

If you envy all those big-busted girls because the boys look at them, you'd better be glad they're looking at THEM and not you!

I'm 15 and also flat, but I consider myself lucky because when a boy looks at me, I know it's not because I'm big-busted.

So consider yourself lucky, because when the right guy comes along, he'll love you for what you are, not for what you have — FLAT AND HAPPY.

Welch Medical Report

There has recently been a resurgence of interest in the treatment of angina pectoris, the recurrent squeezing sensation of heaviness and pressure felt under the breastbone by people whose arteries cannot supply the heart with the oxygen it needs to deal with overexertion, emotional stress or the burden of heavy meals.

A tiny, sublingual tablet of nitroglycerine is still the medicine of choice for an acute attack of angina because of its highly reliable ability to stop the distress abruptly as it dissolves and is absorbed under the tongue.

In addition, nitroglycerine can often be used to prevent the onset of pain in situations where the sufferer knows in advance that he will be confronted by physical activity or an emotionally stressful challenge. A nitroglycerine tablet under the tongue, followed by a pause of a minute or two, can make possible the painless negotiation of a steep staircase or turn a threatening and potentially painful interview into an uneventful encounter.

The way in which nitroglycerine produces its effect on heart pain is not entirely clear, but it appears to increase the blood flow to the inner layers of heart muscle and at the same time reduce the pressure inside the heart. Although the use of nitroglycerine has been advised against during an acute heart attack, work is now under way to restudy the potential usefulness of these effects on heart muscle which has lost some of its blood supply.

For prolonged nitrate effect to discourage anginal attacks, so-called long-acting nitrates have been introduced in the form of tablets to be chewed or dissolved under the tongue, but it is not clear that their effect is any more prolonged that of nitroglycerine itself.

Another method consists of applying nitroglycerine to the skin of the chest wall as an ointment under a plastic bandage. In one report, such an ointment increased tolerance for exercise, without producing chest pain, for as long as three hours.

So called long-acting nitrates that are swallowed into the stomach in pill form rather than dissolved under the tongue have also been widely used in a effort to obtain prolonged prophylaxis of angina. The consistent effectiveness of such oral preparations has not been established.

The most effective new means of cutting down on the frequency and severity of anginal attacks has occurred with drugs that block the speeding up of the heart normally evoked by exertion and emotional stress. These so-called "beta-blockers," of which propanolol is the best known (marketed under the name of "inderal"), block the speed-up of the heart which normally occurs under stress, lowering the demand for oxygen, thus preventing the anginal attack.

Beta-blockers cannot be used in patients with seriously weakened hearts, and it is also contraindicated in patients who have a tendency to asthma.

In properly selected patients with recurrent anginal pain, the administration of beta-blockers has been the most significant advance in recent times for sustained prophylaxis against anginal distress.

But when attacks do occur or threaten to occur, nitroglycerine continues to be the drug of choice for the acute situation and its effectiveness is not interfered with by propanolol.

(a) Played with success a few years ago by Bobby Fischer.

(b) 6 . . . B-KN5 could be considered here.

(c) Leads to trouble (Black's position is not good anyway). Best would have been 11 . . . B-K3. What follows is very instructive, and almost proves that Black now has a lost position.

(d) Cannot play 13 . . . P-B3; as 14.N-N6 would mate.

(e) Must take the Knight, as after 14 . . . K-N1; 15. BxB decides.

(f) A piece up, yet Black appears completely lost. Mate on N8 is threatened.

(g) Now there's no way Black can stave off defeat.

(h) The pawn formation leaves White with a pawn up in the centre; Black's majority pawns on the Q's side only add up to three against three!! White now finishes the game in expert fashion!

(i) A game of great interest to all students of the game. Hats off to Ms. Orton!

Santa Delays Sought!

Department stores are being asked to delay the arrival of Santa Claus by a couple of weeks this year.

Parents of pre-schoolers in the area say "they can't always avoid Santa" because he leaves his palace and circulates around the stores in early December.

"And as soon as a pre-schooler sees Santa in a department store they expect him to come down the chimney the next night," said Mrs. Helen Thornton, secretary treasurer of the 600-member Vancouver Island Co-operative Preschool Association.

"It's a bit disconcerting."

Mrs. Thornton says pre-schoolers are exposed to Santa too early and she feels that if department stores are aware of the parents' concern they still have time to hold back on setting up Santa for a few weeks.

Eaton's has announced Santa will arrive Dec. 17 and stay until Dec. 23. That decision to delay his arrival two weeks, may have been prompted by her request, said Mrs. Thornton.

She is on the Eaton's consumer advisory committee and mentioned the concern of parents at the last meeting.

The mail strike interrupted requests to other area department stores, she said.

Trees are being decorated at The Bay this week and it's not even Halloween yet, Mrs. Thornton said.

The association also hopes to contact the Consumer Association of Canada and request that department stores be pressured into cutting down the number of war games and violent toys being sold.

'CIA AGENTS' NAMED

STOCKHOLM (Reuter) — A group of journalists say that five diplomats at the United States Embassy here are CIA agents.

British writer George Lennox said he and other freelance writers used U.S. state department registers and Swedish lists of accredited diplomats as well as other unnamed sources to single out the alleged CIA agents.

Former CIA agent Philip Agee, in Stocknolm to publicize his book on American intelligence activities, Inside the Company, said in a radio interview that his own investigations confirmed that seven embassy officials, including the five named by Lennox, are CIA agents.

Lennox says the head of CIA operations in Sweden is Paul Garbler, recorded on the Swedish diplomatic list as an attache. He arrived here in 1973.

Asked why he was naming the alleged agents Lennox said.

"I feel it essential to disabilize the CIA and put it on the defensive by identifying its agents, but I am not accusing them of any illegal activities in Sweden."

Are Creeds Important Today?

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

A few years ago, when the Churches were producing new creeds and modernizing the language of the old ones, I was involved, briefly, in some discussions on the nature and use of creeds and on the whole issue of the importance of the stating with some exactness of Christian beliefs. After one session, in which there were some rather acrimonious disagreements, I, to relieve my frustrations, drafted a creed which I felt expressed the real beliefs of some church members. It isn't quite fair — but, on the other hand, it may be suitable for people who like a religion that isn't too challenging. Here is what I produced, amid the encircling gloom:

"I believe in God the Father Almighty because all right-thinking people do. I think that he is very good-natured and tolerant and that He winks benevolently at our little sins because he knows that deep-down we're really OK. I believe that Jesus Christ lived a very good life and that I should admire Him very much. I try to go along with the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, although I am sure that God is aware that much of it is pretty impractical for today's world. I believe that the Cross stands for something very important, but I'll leave it to the clergy to work out what that importance is. I believe in the Church, even though I may not attend its services very often or contribute much to its support. But I know that the Church stands for something important in the community — and I do want my daughters to be able to have church weddings. I believe, sort of, in the life everlasting — at least, I hope that in the end everything will turn out all right for me and my loved ones: after all, God does look after his own. Amen."

I'll admit that that isn't completely fair. But is it completely unfair?

We like to tell ourselves that it is not so much what you believe that counts as how you live. That platitude does contain an element of truth, but it also obscures a deeper truth. Our superficial beliefs, of course, may not have much influence on our actions, but our deep beliefs, which we may not be able to articulate with any precision, do. Bernard Shaw once made an important point in these words: "What a man believes may be ascertained, not from his creed, but from the assumptions on which he habitually acts." Our affirmations of belief are authentic to the extent that they reflect and inform the assumptions on which we habitually act.

Just how important, then, are creeds, and the beliefs which they encapsulate, for the modern Christian? They have importance as they motivate and nurture the Christian believer in the Christian way of life, as they help him or her to personal fulfilment and guide him or her in compassion and mercy. Beliefs, and the creeds in which they may be expressed, are of essential importance as instruments of the Christian life and as expressions of the central realities of Christian faith.

Aging Issues Aired

A "Convo-on-Aging" sponsored by the Luther Court Society of Victoria will be held in Grace Lutheran Church, 1273 Fort, on Nov. 1 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The purpose of the event is to reach a broad group of people from youth to 90-year-olds with an educational experience in which they share an experience of aging and its implications for others, for themselves, and for society.

Chaplain Ralph Odegard of the Good Samaritan Society, Edmonton, Alta., and Mrs. Vera McIver, Hospital Service Director of St. Mary's Priory Hospital, Victoria, will be two of the leaders who will help look at the subject of aging.

The day will begin with a devotional time and singing, and in addition to presentations by the leaders there will be small group discussions, role play, and a closing devotional.

SPEAKER on Sunday at Cordova Bay United's 9:45 a.m. service and at Gordon Head United's 11 a.m. service is Mardi Jenson, who recently returned from Tokyo, Japan. Jenson was one of 90 Canadians who participated in the youth exchange as part of the 50th anniversary celebrations of the United Church of Canada. She graduated from the University of Victoria last May.

Que. Lands Settlement Precedent for B.C. Indians?

By AB KENT

An ominous cloud of upheaval lying over Arctic Quebec may cast a sadow long enough to touch British Columbia, a northern Anglican Church administrator said in Victoria this week.

Archdeacon Caleb Lawrence, rector of Great Whale River, Que., said in an interview he has reservations about the immense James Bay hydro project and the tentative settlement the governments of Quebec and Canada have negotiated with the James Bay Energy Corp. on behalf of native people for their lands.

The Eskimos, who are in the minority, are uncertain — some have split from their representative group. The Indians are ready to ratify knowing the settlement is second-best but realizing the inevitability of the project.

When the rivers are dammed, land flooded for reservoirs, highways built and minerals exploited Arctic Quebec will wear a strange new face. A way of life will have ended and the new ways will bring upheaval instead of stability.

"It concerns me that this type of settlement will set the precedent for B.C. and the Northwest Territories," Lawrence said.

He referred to the broad question of native land claims in connection with both unsatisfied historic situations and the new question of rights in the territories to be crisscrossed with petroleum exploration surveys and pipelines.

In addition, Lawrence said, ecologists remain "extremely upset" with the James Bay project because of the changes it will bring to watersheds, the effect on climate, forests and wildlife.

Meanwhile construction forges ahead, giving employment to an eventual 125,000 people at a cost recently estimated around $12 billion — double the original estimate.

Three rivers will be diverted, 3,300 square miles of land flooded and ultimately 10 million kilowatts of power will be generated.

In five years Lawrence's parish can expect a highway to the south, which will bring mining development, tourists and all the problems of civilization as it is practised in the south.

"We wonder how it is going to end," the minister said. "I can't see it levelling off."

Lawrence has been 10 years in the Arctic, reads, writes and preaches in Cree and Inuit besides English, and helps administer one of the largest — maybe the largest — Anglican dioceses in the world. His own parish is among the largest in the north, including the mainland area around Great Whale River along the east shore of Hudson Bay and the Belcher Islands, NWT.

The Anglican Church plays a large role in the life of northern Quebec, which was evangelized by Anglicans as early as 1876, and it remains dominant.

Five of the diocesan communities are self-supporting — no help from the outside church — and three of them are in Lawrence's parish: Great Whale River, Port Harrison and Povungnituk. The other two are much larger Frobisher Bay and Yellowknife, capital of the Territories.

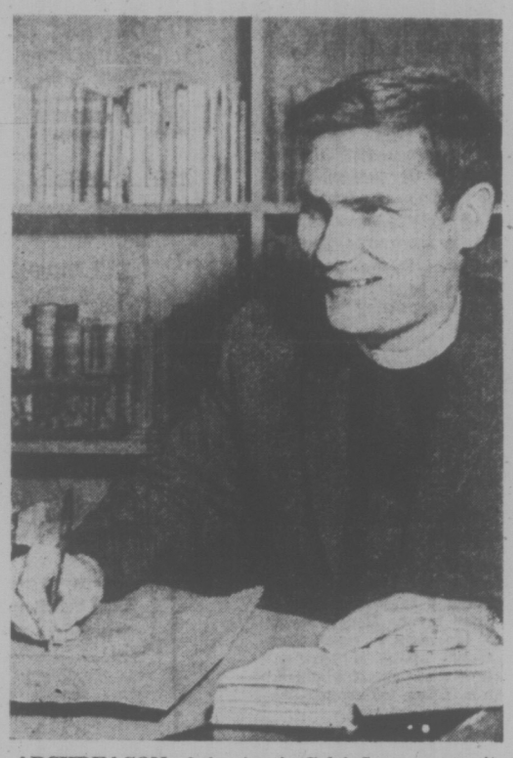
"People have learned to take seriously as Christians that part of their obligation to the church is support from their own incomes," Lawrence said.

They can see the church is the only organization in the north which is supported entirely by the members living there, unlike such other institutions as government administration and the Hudson's Bay Co.

They also realize this gives them power, Lawrence said.

He recalled that finances in his first year of appointment to the north were "touch and go," but this year individual giving in his parish will amount to $23,000 or $24,000. An average week's church attendance in Great Whale River is 800 — including several services — in a community of 1,000 Anglicans.

The native people have asked the church for help in reconciling opposing points of view in the James Bay power issue, and it has agreed to mediate.



ARCHDEACON of the Arctic Caleb Lawrence writing out a sermon in Inuit, the Eskimo phonetic language. (Irving Strickland photo.)

"The church has made it clear to both groups it will not arbitrate," Lawrence said.

Native people have been helped by the government to present their case on the lands question, but Quebec is anxious for ratification because construction moves ahead toward a deadline aiming at generating station start-up by the beginning of the 1980s.

In view of this there is the threat that government financing will be withdrawn, leaving opponents of the project to provide legal services, research and other expenses on their own.

Lawrence said the Anglican Church in Canada may be asked to give financial help to carry on the work until a satisfactory settlement is reached.

At present there are attempts being made in the north to explain in concrete detail the effects of the tentative agreement reached a year ago and which has been circulating since.

Lawrence said there are basically three levels of settlement on the land question: creation of areas exclusively for Indian and Eskimo use — like Indian reservations in the south; giving the natives hunting and fishing rights in the lands to be affected by the project, and providing for them to share in future profits from development; taking lands away from native users with no strings attached in exchange for adequate compensation.

Of the Eskimo people who approved of the terms last fall, four communities have had a change of heart. They are now "so dissatisfied" they have withdrawn from the Northern Quebec Inuit Association and oppose ratification.

They number about 1,200 or one-third of the Eskimo people north of Rupert's House.

The Indian people of the area concerned out-number Eskimos 2-1, placing the Inuits in a weak position and faced with accepting a settlement, like-it-or-not.

Lawrence said the two native societies are separated by a gulf so far unbridged. "They are vastly different in language and outlook and remain separate from each other." Indians are a deeper people and base much of their thoughts and behaviour on their role in a natural world, and a belief that they cannot survive without their land.

Eskimos, by comparison, have been called the ultimate pragmatists. "What is important to him is what will work. He has little time or vocabulary for theories ... able to adapt quickly to his new way of life."

Lawrence said Eskimos have surprisingly little — if any — sense of past. "Some people don't know the names of their grandparents; some old men don't know the name of their first wife." There is less mythology in their culture than the Indians have, or perhaps Eskimos in otehr parts of the Arctic.

But they feel they will have something tangible, a security, if they keep their land, the clergyman said.

On the other hand is the Indian's land-based philosophy of life developed over centuries of living in co-operation with nature and which runs so deep that his mythology and pre-Christian religious beliefs still color his world.

"He looks upon animals as his brothers. The trees, the land and water — he tends to feel part of it all (whereas) people of an industrial society going to a new area tend to think in terms of conquering nature."

Lawrence quoted Genesis which places responsibility on man to be the steward of nature's resources. Farmers and others who live on the land may practise this role but others have grown away from it.

Indians adhere to this background, taking only from the white culture what they see they can use, keeping their own personality intact and blended with Christian principles.

"God he sees as creator; Jesus as his brother and friend. He has a deep consciousness of creation. He communes with nature and it heals him."

Lawrence said an Indian, after a family tragedy, may be found camped in the wilderness. "He may be seen 50 miles inland, sitting in his tent reading his Bible."

The land issue has far-reaching implications for all Canadians but especially those along the east shore of Hudson Bay. "(They are) very, very much afraid of what will happen if they find the land they have lived on for centuries is no longer their's," the visitor said.

Lawrence was in Victoria and up-island at the invitation of Bishop of British Columbia Roy Gartrell, and he spoke to a number of church groups on his work in the Arctic.

Services Mark Anniversaries

Many Victoria churches will be holding anniversary celebrations of one sort or another this Sunday.

A choral festival will be held at 3 p.m. in the First United Church, 932 Balmoral, as part of the United Church of Canada's 50th anniversary.

Choirs making up the program include Belmont, Centennial, Duncan United, First United, Gordon United, Metropolitan, Oak Bay United, St. Aidan's, St. Paul's United, Mill Bay and St. Paul's in Sidney.

The accompanists will be Ursula Thomas at the organ and Corine Du Val at the piano.

Looking Forward from Looking Backward will be the theme of the 11 a.m. service at James Bay United Church which is celebrating its 83rd anniversary.

Guest speaker will be the past president of Victoria Presbyterian United Church Women, Mrs. G. G. Smith. Special music will be provided by Schroeder girls' trio.

A Get Together Night will be held at 7:30 p.m. Monday. The evening will start off with the film "United Church of Canada," followed by a memorabilia display, an old-fashioned hymn sing and reminiscences of the early days. Refreshments will be provided by the James Bay United Church men.

Wilkinson Road United Church, 4280 Wilkinson Road, will be holding its anniversary service 5 p.m., followed by a pot luck supper and short program. There will be no Sunday school or morning service.

Fairfield United Church is celebrating its 63rd anniversary during the 11 a.m. service.

The history of Fairfield church goes back to April 4, 1912, when a Sunday school was opened in a tent on Moss Street. In November of that year, the congregation moved into a temporary frame building at Fairfield Road facing Moss Street. A more permanent building, the present gymnasium, was erected in 1921 facing Fairfield Road. The conerstone of the present church building was laid on June 2, 1926 by Lieut.-Gov. Randolph Bruce and Mr. J. Murphy. A meeting in the evening was chaired by the Hon. John Oliver, premier of B.C. The church was officially opened on Oct. 13, 1926 by the late Mrs. David Spencer, Senior.

The church has 500 members and 25 elders who look after visiting in each of the 25 districts as well as giving spiritual leadership in the congregation. The committee of stewards has been active in maintaining the fabric of the church.

The outside of the building was painted this summer, the work being paid for out of regular funds without special appeals. Nearly all the rooms in the church have been painted by volunteer labor. Last year a new organ was installed.

Guest speaker at this Sunday's service is the Rev. Dr. A. A. Rogers of Ryerson in Vancouver. Dr. Rogers served in the chapliancy during the Second World War and was awarded the Order of the British Empire.

The Lutheran and Calvinist will exchange pulpits in celebration of the 458th anniversary of the Protestant Reformation.

Rev. Alfred Johnson will preach at 10:30 a.m. in the First Christian Reformed Church and Rev. Peter DeBruyne will preach at 10 a.m. at the Lutheran Church of the Cross.

The Venerable A. E. Hendy, who retired as archdeacon in 1972, will preach at the 8 and 9:30 a.m. services on Sunday at St. Dunstan's Gordon Head parish church, Tyndall and San Juan.

While Hendy was Rector of Gordon Head, the two small missions of St. Richard's and St. Chads' were united and St. Dunstan's was built.

St. Dunstan's is now also used by the Gordon Head United Church.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By SYDNEY OMARR

Astrological Forecast for Sunday, Oct. 26

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are in position to "call the signals." You are able now to utilize lessons learned in recent past. You can deal with persons who own property, have authority to implement decisions. Know fidence. Cancer, Capricorn figure prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make adjustment in domestic area. Relatives visit, call or write. Be diplomatic, but live your own life. Someone is working behind the scenes — in your behalf. Cash flow, recently blocked, is due to resume. That's good!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Taurus message. Be aware of subtle signals, nuances. One who previously appeared indifferent could take new interest in you. Pisces, Virgo figure in picture. You are able to locate lost article. You are called upon to speak for group, club or organization.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You've asked for a "bigger slice," more responsibility — now you get it. Cycle is high; you'll understand and deal with obstacles, roadblocks. Emphasis is on building, securing position, utilizing experience and exercising authority. Capricorn, Aries are involved.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Good news from afar indicated. You round out project. You gain more attention. Your appeal multiplies. Product receives better display. Aries, Libra persons could be in picture. A special film or report might figure prominently.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Friendly persuasion may not fill bill; means demonstrate, illustrate, be direct, original and independent. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. Accent is on desire, romantic involvement. A wish might be fulfilled, but don't request too much, too soon.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have more in your favor than some would admit. Know is and proceed with confidence. Accent is on career, ultimate goal, promotion, standing in community. Aquarian could figure prominently. Follow through on hunch.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Travel, writing, publishing and advertising are featured. Behind scenes manoeuvres could lead to a new assignment — or assessment. Gemini, Libra and Sagittarius persons could be in picture. Get on phone and check facts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Dig deep for "hidden material." Someone, who should know better, is not revealing complete story. Utilize creative talents. What you seek is available. You make gains now through unorthodox procedures.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get your own point of view across. Be more aware of public relations. Gemini, Virgo persons could be in picture. Accent understanding of agreements, contracts. Friend, well meaning, could say things which cause raised eyebrows.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Family members may be in mood to argue. Don't compound error. If diplomatic, the gain could be considerable. Respond accordingly. Taurus, Libra could be involved. A relative voices complaint. Be reasonable.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): See people as they are: avoid self-deception. Accent on romance, creativity, impulsiveness. Money question will be resolved. Refuse to be saddled with obligations not really your own. Steer clear of speculative schemes.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY — You are intense, determined and stubborn. Capricorn, Cancer persons play important roles in your life. You are due now to break through red tape, to communicate and travel. Domestic change or adjustment is due in November. You usually finish what you start — your word is your bond.

Astrological Forecast for Monday, Oct. 27

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Those who make promises may be embarrassed. Know it and don't press. Diplomacy is your ally. Family member with "expensive tastes" craves affection. Know it — do something about it. Taurus, Libra individuals are featured.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Go slow. Wait, look, listen, formulate plans. Avoid rushing to judgment. Residence, property, older persons — these factors are part of your day. See as is, not merely as you wish places and people might be.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Money, relatives and pressures resulting from past commitments — these are spotlighted. You get nothing for nothing — and that now will be verified. Organize priorities. Be positive concerning goals. Older family members confide problems.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Finish rather than initiate, put completing touches on assets, ability to collect, to get money's worth — these areas are dominant. Aries, Libra, figure prominently. A long-range project. Your person connected with "the law" figures prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New approach to responsibilities is indicated. Your work, health command more attention than usual. Strive for greater balance between recreation and labor. Member of opposite sex helps you "change your ways."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Delay in "celebration plans" should not be taken too seriously. Those who claim to know it all are actually awaiting your counsel. Be aware of it; view situation accordingly. Aquarian could play significant role. Relative provides "spice" with surprise announcement.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Diversify. Highlight versatility. Friend confides problem related to marriage and money. Be receptive without becoming inextricably involved. Gemini, Sagittarius figure in picture. Some goals, desires may be subject to revision.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be specific about facts, figures. You are given chance to assume greater responsibility. Your popularity increases. You are able to remove roadblock to progress. Taurus, Aquarius, Leo persons could figure prominently. You might be appearing "before a camera."

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent on meditation, interpretation of "inner voice." Long-distance call could contain information regarding travel, investment. Gain shown through written word. Get thoughts, concepts on paper. Gemini, Virgo figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You "turn tables." What appeared a setback rebounds in your favor. Money, cash flow, revelation concerning emotional status of partner, mate — these are highlighted. Taurus, Libra individuals are likely to be in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on long-range decision, on legal matters, on commitments, on state of partnership, marriage. What was hidden comes to view. You are able to define terms, to refine techniques, to understand past errors. Pisces, Virgo persons figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Concentrated efforts bring best results. Means this is time to commit, to go all out, to be dedicated. Halfway procedures fall apart at seams. You will be rewarded if plans are put into action. A special service will be rewarded if plans are put into action. A special service will be activated.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY — you are drawn to medicine, the healing arts. You are capable of helping people who are in trouble. December will be your most significant month this year. Aries, Libra persons play important roles in your life. This has been a year of change for you with special relationships emphasized.

The Selling of a Landed Family . . .

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

For this week, at least, Victoria has had stronger links with the Great Duke than merely the street name, Wellington Avenue, the thousands of knee-high Wellington boots worn by school children in the fall rains, and the fact that the Empress Hotel's dining room was serving Beef Wellington.

Christopher Scott, the man who manages the country estates of the eighth Duke of Wellington at Stratfield Saye, near Reading, in Berkshire, was on a visit here with his Vancouver-born wife.

As Scott explained in an interview, it was partly a holiday, partly an exercise in promoting England's latest stately home to put out the welcome mat, and partly an opportunity to learn about — and perhaps adapt — some of the methods British Columbia uses in the development and operation of its extensive system of parks and open spaces.

Stratfield Saye House is the residence of the great-great-grandson of England's most famous military commander. The house itself, a comparatively small home with a total of 100 rooms," and the 600-acre Wellington Country Park nearby (merely a tiny segment of the 8,300-acre estates some 40 miles from London) were opened to paying visitors for the first time last year, 160 years after the famous battle at Waterloo.

In gratitude for that famous victory of 1815, Parliament voted the sum of 600,000 pounds for the purchase of a country house and estate befitting the Duke of Wellington's heroic status. After considering and rejecting several distinguished pieces of real estate, he settled on Stratfield Saye.

But apparently it was never originally his intention to live in the house itself, the main part of which was built around 1630 by Sir William Pitt, Comptroller of the Household to James I.

With all the instincts of a latter-day developer, the Duke envisaged demolition and redevelopment, with the replacement being a far grander, palace-like structure. But, "fortunately," as the current Duke notes in a foreword to the official visitors' guide, his imagination outstripped his remuneration.

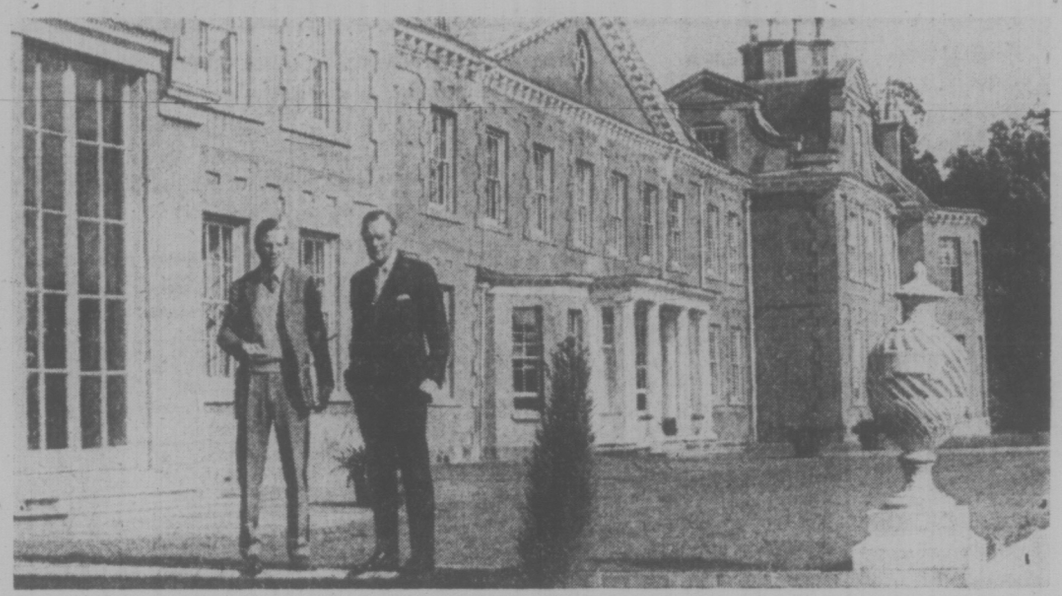
Instead, the Great Duke had to content himself with additions, renovation and the installation of all mod. con. — including such unheard-of comforts as central heating in the passages and blue patterned china water closets in every room.

Now, like Blenheim, Woburn and numerous other historic piles, Stratfield Saye House has had to make the traumatic adjustment to the harsh realities of economic survival, by admitting 30-pence-a-head plebeians and peasants through its portals.

As Scott expressed it: "All the political, taxation and economic guns are ranged against the big land owners, and as a result of lot of them have had to open their homes to the public.

"They don't do so because they like it, but because they have to. But having decided the pressures are sufficiently strong, one does it as best one can and tries to make a professional job of it."

In the case of Stratfield Saye, the "professional job" entailed a five-year planning and development period, and the sale of 1,700 acres to finance the capital expenditure of about 750,000 pounds.



"SMALL, POKEY and unworthy of so great a figure . . ." That's how the Duke of Wellington's friends described the country home given to him by a grateful nation after the Battle of Waterloo. But Canadian realtors might be a little more enthusiastic.

Scott said the visitor can now enjoy, besides the tour of the house and its fine possessions and Wellington memorabilia, the outdoor attractions of the country park with its mixture of parkland, woodland and water. There are nature trails, opportunities for boating, fishing, riding, camping, a "dry-ski" (grass) slope and a reception area with cafeteria.

There is not, however, a game park, nor any intention of ever creating one. The descendant of the Most Noble Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington, firmly ruled out the very idea.

In the clipped, understated British way which is the most devastating form of oblique criticism, Scott explained: "I think it has been overdone.

"People are now perfectly familiar with going to see wild animals in the wrong sort of environment; they are no longer major attractions."

"We shall try to keep things as natural as they possibly can be, with the minimum of development," he said.

Not so very long ago, any agent for the landed gentry would be concerned with matters no more complex than supervision of pheasant and partridge populations, fences and general land management.

Scott, by contrast, sees his job essentially as that of businessman, combining financial know-how, promotional flair and other recently-acquired skills to package in its most attractive form — without schlock or overtones of Disneyland — a highly commercial commodity.

Helping him in this task is a team of 150 employees, headed by four key personnel: his land agent, commercial manager, chartered accountant and the manager of the Duke's 3,000-acre farm.

"Basically, our job is to ensure that this historic estate endures into the next century," said Scott, an expert on antique collecting who has written several books on the subject.

To listen to this quiet, courteous Englishman is to believe that he will succeed — with style, taste and an instinctive feel for "selling" history without robbing great men of their dignity.

Perhaps, from his lofty perch in Valhalla, the immortal Duke himself is giving a curtly military nod of approval.

Weddings

Crombie — Carter

The Church of St. John the Divine was the scene of a lovely wedding at 2 p.m. on Sept. 20th, 1975, when Bonnie Elizabeth Carter, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Y. K. Carter, was given in marriage by her father to David Thomas Crombie, son of Mr. Thomas F. Crombie and the late Mrs. Crombie. Canon Grahame Baker officiated.

Bonnie was radiant in her classic wedding gown of white silk jersey, featuring high rolled collar and fitted bodice with drawn thread design outlined in pearls. At the waist a pearl motif centred the sash-like belt. The full sleeves repeated the design. A delicate lace daisy and pearl Juliette cape held her long cathedral veil of tulle edged all around in the lovely pearls. She carried a bouquet of deep red and golden roses. Her charming attendants wore white see-through picture hats, powder blue sleeveless gowns with high tucked bodices and mock-turtle necklines, shoulder length white gloves and carried arm bouquets of white carnations. Sharlene O'Keeffe was maid-of-honour; bridesmaids were Bonnie's sister Jane Carter, Jill Watson, and Lynn Beamish, all of Victoria. David's best man was Bob Richdale; ushers were his brother, Bruce Crombie of Salt Spring Island, Bonnie's brother Derek Carter and Greg Mace, of Victoria. Mrs. Carter chose an elegant ensemble of soft shrimp polyester silk. Soft folds fell from the jewelled waist, the bodice multi-gathered to form a V-neckline. The gown had a matching Chanel jacket with orchid en corsage. Bonnie's grandmother, Mrs. L. Hamm of Campbell River wore a lovely pastel flowered nylon sheer gown with orchid en corsage. David's grandmother, Mrs. Ferris of Victoria, wore a beautiful midnight blue gown adorned with an orchid.

Following the ceremony a garden party reception was held at the home of the bride's parents at 948 Foul Bay Road. The toast to the bride was made by long-time family friend Dr. Jack Haley. Telegrams from France, Scotland, Vernon, and Kingston, Ontario were read by the best man. Hugh Carter returned from his tour of duty with the UN in Egypt in time to attend his sister's wedding. Other out-of-town guests came from Campbell River, San Francisco and Monterey, Calif., Parksville, Vancouver, Tsawwassen and Toba Inlet. Wearing a chic marine blue pantsuit and white satin blouse with corsage of pink rosebuds, the bride left with her husband on a trip through B.C. and Alberta. Mr. and Mrs. Cromble have since taken up residence at Fort MacMurray, where the groom is employed with Alberta Power.

9 IN MEMORIAM

CROZIER — In loving memory of our daughter and sister, Marian Crozier, who passed away October 26, 1974.
One year has passed since that sad day,
When one we loved was called away;
God took her home — it was His will;
Within our hearts she liveth still.
—Always remembered by her mother, brother and sisters.

GRILLS — In loving Memory of our Father "Charles Stuart Grills" who passed away Oct. 22, 1973.
I stood in front of the grave my head bent over,
My lips moved in silent prayer.
Daddy I called softly
But there was no reply.
Just the sounds of the trees
Being rustled by the wind.
Daddy, I brought you flowers
They're daisies, my favourite kind.
I took the freshly picked flowers and laid them next to a small marker.
A tear trickled down my cheek
For tomorrow
The flowers will be dead,
Because nothing lives forever
Daddy, I whispered again
No, nothing lives forever.
—Sadly missed by by daughters Kathy, Sandy and Maureen, sons Chuck and Frank, loving wife Patricia.

IRISH—In loving memory of our Mother, Dorothy E. A. Irish, who passed away October 25th, 1969, our Dad, William Sanford Irish, April 19th, 1948, our Aunt, Ruth Jessie Hyde, November 19th, 1969.
—Always remembered,
Mae Pettersen, Agnes Long.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD. AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
—WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS.

SHANGRI-LA
SAANICH PENINSULA

Here stands a waterfront property of over one acre in size that really is a Shangri-La. A private and secluded winding black topped road takes you through lovely trees and garden to the waterfront and the large 2-bedroom main home. Yes, there is a completely self-contained guest cottage also. Space does not permit all the glowing reports I may give you. However, to mention a few — there is wall-to-wall carpeting throughout, picture windows overlooking entire seaward side, white shell beach, wall-to-ceiling fireplace of Roman brick, heatilator in living room, fireplace also in family room. Property on city water, permanent sea wall, large sundeck and patio over boathouse with boat winch, hot-water heating, and believe me I could go on and on. Full price $135,000. MLS. Water Poisons Spread In U.S.

WASHINGTON (WP) Poisonous industrial chemicals called PCBs are widely contaminating the environment—including some drinking water — three years after the government thought it had them "well in hand," a worried U.S. Environmental Protection Agency revealed Friday.

PCBs (polychlorinated biphenyls) at certain levels can cause serious toxic effects in humans. They threaten the food chain and, according to a recent unpublished report cited by the EPA, malignant liver tumors developed in rats exposed to one part per 100 billion of a particular PCB.

High PCB levels recently reported in fish in the Great Lakes area, the Hudson River Valley and elsewhere "underscore the urgency of the problem," Dr. John Buckley, an EPA consultant and former official, told the Senate commerce sub-committee on the environment.

PCBs impair the ability of fish to reproduce.

Contamination "is 'more widespread" and "some concentrations are higher than previously believed," Buckley told sub-committee chairman John Tunney.

These concentrations "greatly exceed" Food and Drug Administration guidelines, thus "threatening our ecological resources" and "impacting directly on the jobs of local wishermen and on available food supplies," Buckely testified.

"At the same time continuing PCB discharges are adding further to the total environmental burden of the chemical, which degrades very slowly indeed," he said.

'Mom' Facing Jail In Baby Death

CONYERS, Ga. (UPI) — A woman who planned to adopt a Vietnamese orphan today faces two years in prison on charges stemming from the baby's death.

"No, no, my God, no!" screamed Mrs. Katherine Maltbie when Judge William Dean passed sentence after her conviction of child abuse in the death of nine-month-old Nguyen Thi.

Mrs. Maltbie, 23, had originally been charged with murder in the case.

In passing sentence, Dean said that "even though the jury had recommended mercy, in view of the nature of this crime, I sentence you to two years in the state penitentiary."

Mrs. Maltbie screamed and fell into the arms of her husband, Richard, 25.

Her attorneys immediately filed notice of appeal.

The child died of a skull fracture July 12 after 12 days in a coma. Prosecution medical experts testified the baby was "abused and battered" when admitted to an Atlanta hospital.

Hunters Protest

LANSING (UPI) — Michigan hunters, saying they were slandered by the television documentary The Guns of Autumn, are suing CBS for $200 million in punitive damages plus $100 for every hunter in the state.

The $300 million suit was filed Friday by the Michigan United Conservation clubs on behalf of the state's one million hunters.

Executive director Thomas Washington said CBS agents duped the organization into co-operating with assurances the progran would accurately reflect the sport.

Judge Ray Hotchkiss immediately enjoined CBS from destroying or altering film and sound recorded in preparation of The Guns of Autumn, aired Sept. 5, or the follow-up program, Echoes of the Guns of Autumn, aired Sept. 28.

A hearing was set for Nov. 24.

Scenes were "intentionally biases and unfair and intended to portray the Michigan sport game hunter as cruel, selfish and unfeeling," Washington claimed.

He said footage favorable to hunters was deliberately left out and that the unused footage would prove that only anti-hunting clips were included in the program.

Charges Dropped

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Charges of assault against RCMP constables J. P. Barron and J. Wakley of the city detachment have been withdrawn in provincial court. The charges were laid by Nark Bathe of Prince Rupert after an Oct. 5 incident. Bathe pleaded guilty Wednesday to assaulting a police officer and was fined $250.

STARS TRYING TO SAVE N.Y.

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Who says the hinterland hates the Big Apple?

"The first annual Save New York Telethon" was a surprising success, fuelled by a turnout of stars from the Hollywood colony of ex-New Yorkers.

What began as a put-on may raise more than $1,000 for New York City, after making the city and its woes the butt of most of the jokes.

As one participant put it: "In Poland now, they tell New York jokes."

John Barbour, who organized the telethon, left for New York today to personally hand to Mayor Abe Beame the cash proceeds of the hour-long telethon Friday night: $213.81.

"If I don't get mugged between the airport and Gracie Mansion," Barbour added.

"The cash take won't save the city, but we have several thousand dollars in pledges," Barbour said immediately after the show.

The money coming includes the biggest donation — $850 for that grungy raincoat Peter Falk wears in the Columbo television series.

Oak Bay Backs Land Exchange

A land exchange which will net Oak Bay an extra half-acre on Anderson Hill park was defended by aldermen today.

The transaction, which has yet to be concluded by bylaw, would see four adjacent lots owned by Dr. E. H. W. Elkington added to the park in exchange for part of Calvert Crescent, an undeveloped roadway adjoining Elkington's property.

The roadway, which now serves as a footpath to the park, would be officially closed but a legal pedestrian access would be retained, Ald. Doug McLelland, chairman of council's parks committee, explained.

Council outlined the move to neighboring residents about 10 days ago in a letter which diagrammed properties involved. The proposal has aroused some hostility for unspecified reasons.

One suggestion is that some people are upset because they did not realize Elkington's donation, announced last spring when Oak Bay acquired the hillside park, involved a land exchange.

Ald. Shirley Dowell and Norm Pimlott confirmed today the exchange has been a part of proceedings from the outset of negotiations.

McLelland said that details are clearly spelled out in the letter to neighbors and in the bylaw, which has received three readings from council.

"I'm happy that we've added to our wilderness park. If the citizens don't want it, they can deal with it at the next council meeting by appearing and convincing council they're wrong.

"But I would also urge citizens who value this wilderness park to show their support of this bylaw."

Inquest Ordered

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — An inquest has been ordered into the death of Timothy Money, 18, of Prince George, after he died in hospital Oct. 11 while awaiting corrective surgery for a broken nose. Police said he apparently died of cardiac arrest while undergoing anesthetic.

KIDNAP SQUALOR

MONASTEREVIN, Ireland (UPI) — The kidnappers of Dutch industrialist Tiede Herrema are holding their hostage in incredible squalor in the upstairs bedroom of a two-story village house, according to police.

"Even the dirtiest prison cell would be cleaner," said a police spokesman. "The conditions are incredibly filthy."

As the siege of the house by troops and police entered its fifth day, the mood of the kidnappers, Eddie Gallagher, 27, and his accomplice Marion Coyle, 19, fluctuated between ribald mirth and violent abuse.

"At one moment they might be laughing, the next cursing and swearing," a police source said.

A senior police officer predicted the abductors and their hostage, now held for 23 days, would be taken out alive.

"We will get them all out," he said. "No one is going to get killed."

Psychologists, meanwhile are monitoring every movement and each word uttered to gauge the mental state of the kidnappers.

GARDENING
jack beastall

This column is the result of questions received over the years, problems encountered, and even complaints about fruit trees in the home garden. While we all have dreams of stepping outside to pick our own luscious apples, pears, peaches, plums and cheries, it requires some thought before planting the trees and some knowledge of the care they need before we can make those dreams come true.

(1) Do we fully realize the work that is necessary to produce good fruit, and are we prepared, or do we have the time, to do that kind of work?

(2) Do we understand the pruning of fruit trees, why they are pruned, and the effects of pruning on growth and fruit production? If not, are we prepared to spend this coming winter studying library books to acquire this knowledge?

(3) How many trees can be reasonably placed in the garden and what effect will their shade have on the present planting of shrubs, lawns, and vegetables?

Here we have to remember that most fruits require two compatible varieties in order to produce satisfactory crops.

It is not wise to depend on trees in adjacent gardens as pollinators, because the properties may change hands at any time and the new owners have every right to remove the trees. This happens all the time and fruit production suddenly stops.

(4) Is the soil in the garden sufficiently well drained over winter fo fruit tree roots? This can only be determined by digging test holes about two feet deep and noting how much water collects in them, and how quickly it drains away.

Apples can stand more water at their roots than any other tree fruit, providing it drains away readily in periods between heavy rains, but they cannot have their roots under water all winter.

Pears will not tolerate nearly as much water around their roots as apples, while the stone fruits (cheries, plums, peaches) must have perfect drainage.

If water collects, and remains, in the test holes, some form of drainage is necessary; can this be easily accomplished?

(5) Orchardists are compelled to apply numerous sprays at various times during the fruiting season in order to produce an apple acceptable for marketing. As a home gardener, do you wish to learn spraying, purchase the necessary power equipment for the job, and the approved face mask and rubber clothing as required by Workman's Compensation to protect your own health?

Will the sprays you have to use damage other plants already in the garden? Since most sprays are residual for 30 days or more, what about the vegetables which will be covered with poisons and cannot be harvested? What about the effects of the spray drift on the neighbors' gardens and their food crops?

How much do you know about spray chemicals and their proper application, and are you prepared to study chemistry, and spray application, for the safety of your own family and other families in he neighborhood?

Spraying is possibly the most serious problem in the home garden because the area is so small that the spray goes far beyond the boundaries; and the garden also contains the home into which the poisonous vapors seep.

For safety, the home gardener has to accept a certain amount of insect and disease damage as inveitable, and not expect his fruit to be comparable to that which he can purchase in the market.

(6) How much fruit does the family actually consume in a year, and what are the family preferences? Is the saving of that money sufficient to warrant growing the fruit? Will the saving be offset by additional expenditure for other food crops that can no longer be grown because of the trees?

(7) Is suitable storage available for keeping the fruits that are grown, or will the fruit be left, hanging on the trees or scattered n the ground as we see in so many gardens?

(8) What about the growth habit and fruiting habit of the different rees?

Apples and pears need two compatible varieities for cross pollination. The trees as purchased should be on semidwaf rootstocks (some vendors call them "dwarf"). Both apples and pears on these stocks can be controlled to a height of 15 to 20 feet. They bear fruit on fruiting spurs which are encouraged to form by pruning. Apply spurs produce for about 15 years, pear spurs for about 10 years. A certain number of new spurs are encouraged each year.

Plums produce a fruiting spur that lasts only about five years, therefore new wood and new spurs are constantly needed, and the trees get larger and larger as the years pass. Also the fruit will be higher on the tree, which means more difficulty in picking and greater losses.

Cherries bear on new wood and become larger every year. The crop is carried higher on the tree each year, and is favored by birds equiring a slightly sour liquid when rain is lacking. Less than 10 per cent of all the cheries grown locally in home gardens is ever harvested.

And don't be led into believing a chery, or a plum, can be limited in size by pruning.

Severe pruning causes the bark to split due to the quantity of sap that has no place to go. Gum oozes from the splits and the trees gradually die.

(9) To decrease the amount of shade, gadeners often think they can plant fruit trees along the lot boundaires. This practice leads to trouble with the neighbors. They have the right to pick all fruit on their side of the fence, also to remove any roots which invade their property.

Fruit trees should be at least ten feet from fence lines, and fifteen feet is safer. This means that all trees will be in the centre of lot. It is also worth remembering how fruit hanging on a tree attracted you when you were going to school.

If you decide to grow fruit a home, grow the vaieties that cannot be marketed because they are unable to withstand rough handling and shipping. You will then enjoy flavors you have never known befoe and find the production of them satisfying.

These questions are not designed to discourage home gardeners from growing their own fruit. The purpose is to encourage serious forethought so that the adventure into fruit growing is profitable and a pleasure.

WORK FOR WEEK

Tulip bulbs can go in by the end of the month; they like cooler soil than the narcissi, make better roots and do not produce early top growth under these conditions. Bulbous irises can go in later, during November.

Remove weeds from rock borders while soil is moist, for only if their roots come away will the job be satisfactory. While at it, see that no matting of fallen leaves collects on flat plants. They become a soggy mass resembling compost if left for the winter.

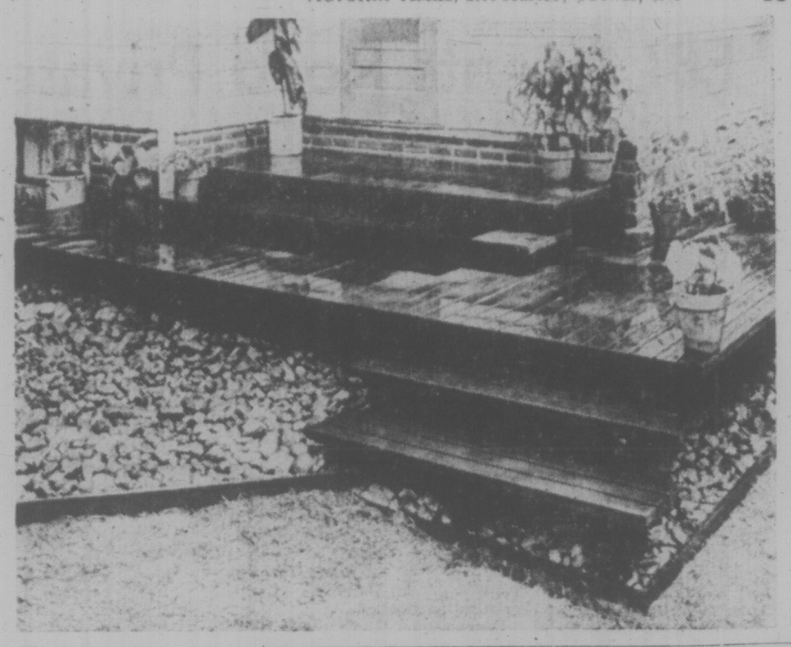
Plant deciduous trees and shrubs; included are roses, fruits, ornamentals, spring flowering shrubs, raspberries and similar.

If evergreen conifers and broadleaved shrubs are in containers they may be safely planted too, since there is no disturbance of their vital root systems. These plants are continuously active.

When grapes are ready to pick, handle with care. Pruning is done after leaf-fall on outdoor grapes.

See that all cabbage family, (and wallflowers) are still firmly settled in the soil. They do not develop in loose soil.

Water newly planted trees and shrubs.



The back entrance to your house needn't be a skimpy looking and sometimes hazardous set of narrow little steps. Stretch out those steps into a spacious and graceful deck that will be a good-looking feature in your landscaping plan and a real asset to your outdoor living.

FBI Agents Read Private Cables At 3 O'Clock Every Morning

WASHINGTON (WP) — Government agents have secretly been monitoring and photographing private international cables to and from Washington for years, House of Representatives found.

Agents of either the FBI or the National Security Agency, it is understood, visited the offices of RCA Global Communications Inc. here at 3 a.m. each day to read all the international cables and photograph ones that interested them.

The practice reportedly continued until May of this year.

Similarly, the investigation found, FBI agents visited the Washington offices of ITT World Communications each day and collected copies of all cable traffic to and from a selected list of countries.

The daily collection of ITT cables, investigators were told, would be picked up around 11 a.m. and returned in mid-afternoon.

The findings became known in the wake of a tumultuous hearing before a sub-committee headed by Rep. Bella Abzug.

Attorney - General Edward Levi made a last-minute attempt to head off the hearing. Abzug said he invoked fears for national security and protested that the testimony might taint the possibility of criminal prosecutions.

Dismissing Levi's complaints as groundless generalizations, Abzug said she had no intention of compromising national security.

An investigation by sub-commitee staff had still turned up plenty of legitimate grist for public hearings, such as "violations of individual rights, the Constitution, the Fourth Amendment and the Federal Communications Act," she said.

Star witness at the hearing was expected to be Joe Craig, the FBI's liaison man with telegraph company offices in the Washington area for about a decade before his retirement last year.

Craig, however, was ordered not to testify by FBI Director Clarence Kelley, apparently on the strength of a secrecy agreement required of all FBI agents.

Witnesses from RCA Global Communications and ITT World Communications had also been scheduled to appear, but Abzug said she was notified "only a day or so ago" that they would not appear unless subpoenaed.

Commercial cable traffic to and from the United States, including messages between foreign embassies here and their governments around the world, have been routinely monitored at least since the Second World War, she said The practices, Abzug added, included:

—"The physical examination of all cables in the Washington office of RCA Global Communications Inc.

—"The physical examination of all cables to and from selected countries in the Washington office of ITT World communications (a subsidiary of IT & T).

—"The securing from cable companies of Telex 'line channel' numbers which, with telephone company co-operation, permit interception of all telex traffic on those lines."

Abzug gave no other details, but it was learned later that the sub-committee staff has interviewed a number of potential witnesses, including Craig and past and present cable company employees.

ITT officials are reportedly defending the practice as a legal offshoot of counter-intelligence activity, but the sub-committee staff apparently feels this doesn't justify the blanket interception of private cables.

The telephones officials said it was company policy not to know or ask about "the nature of the national security investigation" involved or even the names of those whose phones are to be tapped.

Council Defends French

HALIFAX (CP) — The Canada Council answers in French when asked questions in French because it tries to be bilingual, council member Brian Flemming said Thursday.

Flemming, a Halifax lawyer, was chairman of a Canada Council meeting in Moncton, at which several anglophones stalked out when French questions were answered in French without translation.

"When the floor was opened for questioning my opening address, the questions were made by francophones," Flemming said.

"The council attempts to be bilingual, and all questions asked in French were responded to in that language."

He said any participants or observers have the right to ask for translations of any conversations at Canada Council sessions, but to that point no request for translation had been made.

Swiss Approve Loan

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba government has negotiated a $29 million loan on the Swiss money market at an interest rate of 7¾ percent.

Underwriters of the 15-year bonds are Union Bank of Switzerland, Swiss Credit Bank and Swiss Bank Corporation.

ROBBER TOLD: WAIT

KALAMAZZO, Mich. (UPI) — Getting money out of a bank can be rough these days — even for a robber.

A man approached a teller in the First Federal Savings and Loan Association in downtown Kalamazoo Thursday and announced a holdup.

"You'll have to wait your turn," police quoted the woman teller as answering.

With that, the would-be bandit turned and walked out of the bank, police said.

That was stop one.

Within 20 minutes Thursday, police said, the man walked to two other banks within three blocks of each. Twice more his demand for money was rebuffed.

"This guy just ran into three stubborn women," a policeman said. "Talk about your losers."

Train Runs Switch Ways

The Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway's troubled Dayliner service between Victoria and Parksville will revert Nov. 17 to northbound runs in the morning, southbound in the afternoon.

A 6½-month experiment running the Dayliner south from Parksville in the morning and north from Victoria in the evening resulted in the number of passengers dropping by 50 per cent, officials for CP Rail, the parent company, said from Vancouver Friday.

"We cannot ignore the fact that there remains a greater demand for a service originating at the Victoria end of the route and that a service operating from the north appears to be premature at this time," said D. S. Collins, superintendent, passenger service.

The current schedule, which has the 68-passenger Dayliner leaving Parksville in the morning, arriving in Victoria just after noon and heading north again at 5 p.m., was introduced in the spring after public suggestions for a service which would allow up-Island residents a few hours in Victoria with a return trip the same day.

The result has been that from May to September, number of passengers on the northbound run dropped by 68 per cent and on the southbound run there was a decline of 36 per cent, CP Rail said.

Average number of Dayliner passengers through 1974 was 36 northbound and 31 southbound. The service, daily except Sunday, costs $8.70 for a fare between Victoria and Parksville.

The Dayliner run used to reach between Victoria and Courtenay but was shortened to Victoria-Parksville in July because two old trestles south of Courtenay could no longer be guaranteed safe. CP Rail said business did not justify spending the necessary $1.7 million to replace the bridges.

The company said the decision to revert to a schedule close to the old one was made after discussions earlier this month with officials in communities served by the Dayliner. No objections were made.

Starting Nov. 17, the Dayliner will leave Victoria at 8:15 a.m., arriving at Nanaimo at 10:25 a.m. and at Parksville at 11:20 a.m. The earlier departure (formerly 8:30 a.m.) allows connection with the Northbound bus at Parksville, which leaves at 11:39 a.m.

Southbound, the train will leave Parksville at 2 p.m. and Nanaimo at 2:50 p.m., arriving in Victoria at 5 p.m. That schedule permits connection with the bus from north island points which reaches Parksville at 1:33 p.m.

The railway will continue to provide free taxi service at Parksville between the bus stop and railway station.

A day-long seminar on business management will be held Monday at the Princess Mary restaurant.

The seminar, sponsored by RoyNat Ltd. begins at 8:30 a.m. and concludes at 5:15 p.m.

Topics include profit improvement, cash flow and planning.

The meeting will be held in the Princess Room of the Princess Mary Restaurant at 7 p.m.

About 150 members of the restaurant association are expected to attend.

CHARLOTTES EYE OWN COMPANIES

SKIDEGATE (CP) — A two-day study session at this Queen Charlotte Islands community has been told that the islands should establish an economic base, particularly in logging and agriculture.

The session, called Updraft, is part of a world-wide series of meetings being held in conjunction with next year's Habitat Conference scheduled for Vancouver.

Carey Lynde, a local lawyer, told the session that multinational corporations such as Crown Zellerbach and MacMillan-Bloedel should not be allowed "automatic renewal" of timber leases which make local participation in logging or agriculture impossible.

He said most leases would be coming up for renewal in the next 10 years and that residents on the Islands should call on government to reconsider renewals.

Dave Phillips of Sandspit said some island areas, such as the Yakoun Valley, have the potential to be "our Fraser Valley" but that they are under tree farm licenses.

"Our problem is to convince the senior governments that we need to produce our own food on the Islands," he said.

Explosion Dismissed As 'Prank'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A bomb blast that injured two young people Thursday was probably just a Halloween prank that got out of hand, police said Friday.

"It appears to be something we would expect around Halloween time," said inspector John Page. "There is nothing at the moment to indicate it was meant for that particular family."

Niko Burtini, 16, and his girlfriend, Wendy Warner, 15, stepped out of the front door of the Burtini home as a homemade bomb exploded on the front lawn. Both young people were in satisfactory condition in hospital.

M-B Tightens Belt, Brass Get Chopped

VANCOUVER (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., the Vancouver-based forest company, has cut its salaried and executive staff by 97 since Sept. 1, a company official says.

Only 20 of the 97 were laid off, said William Goddard, director of personnel services for the timber giant, B.C.'s largest industrial employer. The remaining 77 were "encouraged attrition" and normal resignations and retirements.

"Encouraged attrition" is early retirement for senior men and women and is not compulsory, Goddard said.

The company which is having the worst economic year in its history, is continuing to encourage early retirements and is not replacing any employees who resign except in critical areas.

The 20 persons laid off were from positions that have been discontinued, Goddard said. "They are excellent people, all of them."

The company employs about 1,000 salaried persons in its Vancouver head office and about 3,000 more in its other North American operations. The attrition policy is company wide, Goddard said.

The staff reductions are part of a 10-per-cent budget reduction ordered in all departments by the company president, Denis Timmis, in September.

Earlier this month, George Currie, M-B chairman, said the company could fail to show a profit this year for the first time in its history. In 1974 the company reported a profit of $72.3 million, compared with $81.8 million in 1973.

Dairy Subsidy Change

VANCOUVER (CP) — Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich wants British Columbia dairy farmers to agree to changes in their income assurance plan that would save the government about $2.4 million a year.

The proposal would increase premiums paid by farmers and change the method by which production costs are calculated. Income assurance in the dairy industry guarantees 100 per cent of production costs to farmers.

The changes would also provide a one-cent-a-quart increase in the retail price of milk.

The dairy committee of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture has rejected Stupich's plan and made a counter-proposal to which the minister has not replied.

VANCOUVER (CP) — An investigation into the death Sunday of 1.3 million fish at the Capilano hatchery will likely show they died of chlorine from the nearby Greater Vancouver Water District chlorination plant, an RCMP spokesman said Friday.

Environment Canada officials have said they believe chlorine was accidentally injected into the hatchery water supply at the plant, or that a vandal or saboteur deliberately dumped the chemical into the hatchery water supply.

BURNABY (CP) — A faulty propane heater is believed to have caused a fire that destroyed a warehouse and several truck trailers at the Public Freightways Ltd. Development.

Dock foreman Henry Friesen said employee Ken Gregory was adjusting a propane heater when a valve flew off and the tank burst into flames. Gregory was seriously injured.

Friesen said he ordered the building evacuated and the flames spread across a loading dock and into 16 truck trailers being loaded. Cargo damage was estimated at $300,000.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Paper wrappings and other remains of a mail bomb that killed a Vancouver man Oct. 5 have been sent to crime officials in Washington D.C. for analysis, police said Friday. The bomb, marked literature from the Greek American Socjety in Pittsburgh, killed Georgios Chatzispiros, 42, and injured his wife and son.

Negligence Charged In Death

VANCOUVER (CP) — James William Vogt, 19, of Vancouver, was charged Friday with criminal negligence causing death after a car crashed into a taxicab at a downtown intersection, killing one woman and injuring six other people.

The dead woman was identified as Louis Elizabeth Kansas, 25, of Vancouver, and formerly of Winnipeg.

Police said a car was driving without its lights about 1:30 a.m. Friday when a police car flashed its headlights to get the driver to turn on his lights.

A spokesman said the driver accelerated and went through a red light, hit a taxi and pushed it onto the sidewalk. Two pedestrians, one of them Miss Kansas, were struck.

A wheel from the taxi struck George Cote, another pedestrian. He was in satisfactory condition in hospital.

Marie Derhak, 62, of Vancouver, a passenger in the cab, was in poor condition in hospital. The other injured were in satisfactory condition.

Empty-Shelf Warning from Some Stores

Times News Services

Empty shelves and food shortages will be the result of the provincial government's price freeze, spokesmen for supermarkets and drug stores said Friday.

Sam Bass, president of London Drugs, said that if the freeze does not allow adjustments for increased costs, shelves will be empty.

"Nobody is going to tell me I'm going to sell at a loss," said Bass, in Vancouver.

"There's going to be a lot of empty shelves. Nobody's going to subsidize Barrett's whims."

Bass said drug firms buy 100 per cent of their stock from outside the provinces.

"There is nothing manufactured in B.C. We get everything from back East."

Shirley Brown, spokesman for Super Valu stores and Kelly Douglas Co. Ltd., said Super Valu will have to comply with the government's order but to do so will mean "tremendous shortages."

She said that 80 per cent of the beef, pork, and luncheon meats sold in British Columbia comes from Alberta.

"Eighty-nine per cent of the drygoods on our supermarket shelves are purchased from outside B.C.," said Brown.

"At this time of year, 65 per cent of our farm produce is imported.

"A price freeze just isn't that simple. B.C. does not produce sufficient food to meet its food requirements.

"In the short term there is an advantage to the consumer, but in the long term the effects on B.C.'s economy will be devastating.

"When there are food shortages, there will be a reduction in the labor requirements and drastic effects on the nutritional intake of our customers."

Barrett's order raises questions which she hopes will be answered quickly, she added.

"If we're going to have our purchasing power frozen, then we're not going to be able to buy. Let's face it, we're just not going to stock it.

Massive Price Freeze Imposed by Barrett

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

A 68-day freeze on the price of food and other basic commodities hit B.C. like a bombshell Friday when Premier Barrett imposed a massive new economic controls program.

As of 5 p.m. Friday the prices of food, drugs, energy and public transport are frozen until Jan. 1.

Tarriffs on intra-provincial rail transport and trucking of food and drugs in the province are also frozen.

A new rent control program was introduced with an 8 per cent ceiling on increases.

Purpose of the program is to see prices do not increase in the period before the federal anti-inflation program comes into full effect, Barrett said.

B.C. has maintained the federal scheme does not adequately control prices and profits and therefore is not fair to the average citizen.

In Ottawa, Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said the freeze will have no effect on the federal anti-inflation program.

The federal government has no intention of instituting a general price freeze, he added.

"I'd have to look at his (Barrett's) plans more closely before commenting in detail, but I can say that we obviously haven't gone for a general freeze, and the B.C. announcement won't cause us to depart from that position."

Asked if he thought the Barrett program will work, he said "there are many prices that just can't be frozen."

The price freeze, along with a package designed to ease the effects of inflation on low income earners, is B.C.'s solution to making the Ottawa program fairer and more equitable.

"This decision did not come easily. I am aware that it will create some difficulties," said Barrett.

"But the alternative is a case-by-case review of all price increases, which would require a large bureaucracy in Victoria, and interminable paper work for business people.

"More importantly, it would offer no immediate price relief to the people of our province."

The freeze will be administered by the consumer services department but Barrett said he did not envision a massive hiring of new people although employees may be seconded from other departments.

No penalties are included in the cabinet order setting out the freeze but Barrett said usual penalties included in provincial summary convictions legislation will apply to those who break the law.

The freeze is imposed under terms of the Consumer Services Act which allows the cabinet to bring in "such measures as the minister deems necessary to control prices within the province in order to minimize the erosion

Useful, Says Gibson

Provincial Liberal leader Gordon Gibson said his party will support the government freeze.

All provinces should bolster the federal wage and price controls by introducing economic guidelines which relate specifically to their own situations, he added.

He described the Barrett measures as a "useful assistance" to the federal program and an indication of B.C.'s willingness to co-operate with Ottawa.

However, he criticized the Barrett government for doing nothing to create jobs with its program and said the plan should have included some incentives for private investment in basic industries.

Conservative leader Scott Wallace said he has not decided whether his party will back the provincial measures but agreed with increases in the minimum wage and mincome, a program that provides minimum payments to persons on fixed incomes.

He said he was surprised there are powers to allow the provincial government to introduce "sweeping and massive" controls without debate in the legislature.

As of noon today Social Credit leader Bill Bennett had made no comment on the government's move leaving Dr.

HIGHLIGHT of the official opening of Oak Bay's new recreational centre Friday night was a jocular swimming duel between Mayor Brian Smith, poolside, and Ken Hurn, chairman of Oak Bay's parks and recreation commission. Smith won handsomely, if not honestly, being pulled more of the length of the pool on the other end of a ski tow rope, hauled in by four conspirators concealed in a washroom. (See story on page 13.)

. . . And Bonuses For Elderly, Poor

A 20 per cent increase in B.C.'s minimum wage, an increase in Mincome and new housing programs are new initiatives promised by the provincial government in its new economic program.

Premier Barrett said Friday that besides fighting inflation the government wants to ensure "that the impact of fighting inflation is shared on a fair and equitable basis."

In addition to the freeze on basic prices, therefore, Barrett brought in a host of initiatives to give advantage to low income earners in the province.

But public servants will be required to stick to federal wage guidelines and senior civil servants will receive no wage increases along with cabinet ministers and MLAs.

The additional measures include:

—a $10 increase in Mincome in addition to the regular cost-of-living boost on Jan. 1;

—an increase in the B.C. minimum wage from $2.50 an hour to $2.75 on Dec. 1 and to $3 on June 1, 1976;

—new housing initiatives including a government first mortgage program with lower rates for low-income families;

Most of these schemes will require legislation and Barrett said the legislation will be brought in during the fall session, expected to begin in mid-November.

Mincome now stands at just under $250 a month but the regular federal cost-of-living adjustment to old-age pensions would boost that to $255 on Jan. 1.

The new increase will bring to $265 a month the level of guaranteed income for senior citizens and the handicapped.

Barrett estimated that program will cost the government between $10 million and $12 million annually.

B.C. hopes the federal government will change the area of its program which limits low-income earners to wage increases of not more than $600 a year while those earning $24,000 can earn salary boosts of up to $2,400.

"The federal proposal provides the smallest increase to those who are already suffering most from inflation," said Barrett.

To fight this trend and to help the unorganized worker in B.C., he said, the minimum wage will increase to $3 an hour.

At the next sitting of the house, Barrett said he will bring in legislation to create a Housing Corporation of B.C. to expand the government's housing activities.

The program of land-banking will be expended to dampen land speculation, he said, and large sums of capital will be available to the new corporation.

Through the government's new B.C. Savings and Trust Corporation, expected to be in operation as a near-bank next year, the province plans to offer a new first mortgage program.

"First mortgages will be available to the public at rates that take account of ability to pay," said Barrett.

British Columbians get an extra hour of sleep tonight as the province turns back its clocks one hour in the annual return to standard time. Clocks officially go back an hour at 2 a.m. Sunday in the changeover from daylight time.

Labor Reaction Cautious But Support Expected

B.C. labor leaders were hesitant in their reaction to provincial additions to price and wage controls, but are expected to support the package which contains many of the provisions pushed for by the labor movement.

The guidelines bring more than 100,000 additional workers in B.C. under the eight per cent wage increase ceiling, including provincial, municipal and hospital employees and teachers.

The four groups earlier this week banded together to fight the federal wage control program "because of the inequities in it."

B.C. Teachers' Federation president Bill Broadley who was involved in the effort to urge the provincial government to correct the inequities, said today the provincial package is a "significant step" towards that goal.

"It's only until Jan. 1, but if the federal government picks up on the plan it should go a long way to protect incomes. If the federal government allows it to die, the inequities will be back again," he said.

The 26,000-member federation is now involved in bargaining with the B.C. School Trustees association and had earlier announced wage demands of about 20 per cent.

A trustees' association spokesman said the organization would be happy to follow the federal and provincial controls but wants the government to ensure the controls are legal.

The 35,000-member B.C. Government Employees Union expected it would be covered by the federal guidelines and is not concerned about the same controls being imposed by the provincial government, union general secretary John Fryer said today.

The union has already negotiated its master contract for all employees and is expected to enter component bargaining soon. The results of the ratification vote on the master contract are expected to be announced this weekend.

The contract includes a cost-of-living adjustment

FRANCO NEAR DEATH

MADRID (UPI) Generalissimo Francisco Franco, 82, showing increasing signs of heart failure after two major heart attacks in a week, received the last rites of the Roman Catholic church today. His family gathered at his bedside in El Pardo palace and medical experts said the end must be near.

The experts said that the old soldier, victor of Spain's bloody civil war and its one-man ruler for nearly 40 years, was fighting and losing his last battle for survival.

They said death probably would come in a matter of hours, paving the way for the transfer of power to Prince Juan Carlos de Borbon, 37, Franco's designated successor who is to become Spain's first king in 44 years.

Franco's increasingly critical condition was disclosed in a medical bulletin issued after noon, signed by his 11 doctors.

It spoke of "increasing congestive heart failure" and said this had been aggravated by fluid in the lungs, making breathing difficult, distension of the abdomen and temporary intestinal paralysis.

About two hours later, the doctors reported no change in Franco's condition which they said remained "grave."

With the news of the caudillo's apparently approaching end, life slowed throughout Spain.

CUPE Members Jeer Trudeau

Times News Services

They shouted "control Trudeau" and sang the song, Solidarity Forever.

Prime Minister Trudeau and his wife, Margaret, were mobbed by a jeering crowd of civil servants angered by federal wage and price control policy in Toronto Friday.

Trudeau was there to address a Rotary Club luncheon and the demonstrators were members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, which is holding its national convention in the same hotel.

Trudeau halted at one point to speak to the angry protesters, but the crowd pressed in close around him and choruses of boos drowned out his words.

In his speech to nearly 1,000 Rotarians, Trudeau said the new economic policy represented a new era in Canada's economic and social history.

"The test is whether we can rediscover as Canadians that will to co-operate in a democratic manner."

Runaway inflation was the result of "everybody trying to catch up with everybody else" to protect themselves against any future increases in the cost of living and the new policy was aimed at equitable sharing of the nation's wealth in the face of rising costs, he said.

The prime minister said that "the government does not like controls any more than anyone else.

"You asked for leadership — you've got it," he said.

Meanwhile, in Ottawa finance minister Donald Macdonald said the federal anti-inflation board can demand prior notification of price increases for cars and some household goods.

But advance notice on food price increases would be hard to ask, he added.

EXPORTS LAGGING

OTTAWA (CP) — Exports lagged $1.043 billion behind imports during the first nine months of this year, Statistics Canada reported Friday.

The deficit compared with a surplus of $1.332 billion in the value of merchandise trade during the same January-September period last year.

The largest single factor in this year's performance was oil.

Canada spent more on buying foreign oil for the eastern provinces and sold less oil from the western provinces to other countries.

Internal Museum Hassle

Another internal hassle appears to be bubbling at the Provincial Museum and while officials are once again keeping mum, this one involved an alleged health hazard from asbestos.

For the second time this year the Times has received an anonymous letter using museum stationery and this one says:

"About half of the provincial museum staff will walk off their jobs next week because of an unsafe building . . . There will be an effort to cover this up."

Calls to museum director York Edwards Friday went unanswered and other officials contacted remained tight-lipped.

But sources described this situation:

When the museum and nearby curatorial tower were built about eight years ago, steel beams were sprayed with abestos to serve as a fire retardant.

A few years later asbestos received increasing publicity as a health hazard, related to the lung disease silicosis and possibly other maladies.

The asbestos on the steel beams is described as a grey fibrous material which flakes and falls off when bumped and following the adverse reports, some of the museum staff are reported to have become concerned.

The buildings have air-conditioning systems and there were fears that floating asbestos fibres were being recirculated. The effectiveness of air filters in the conditioning systems was questioned.

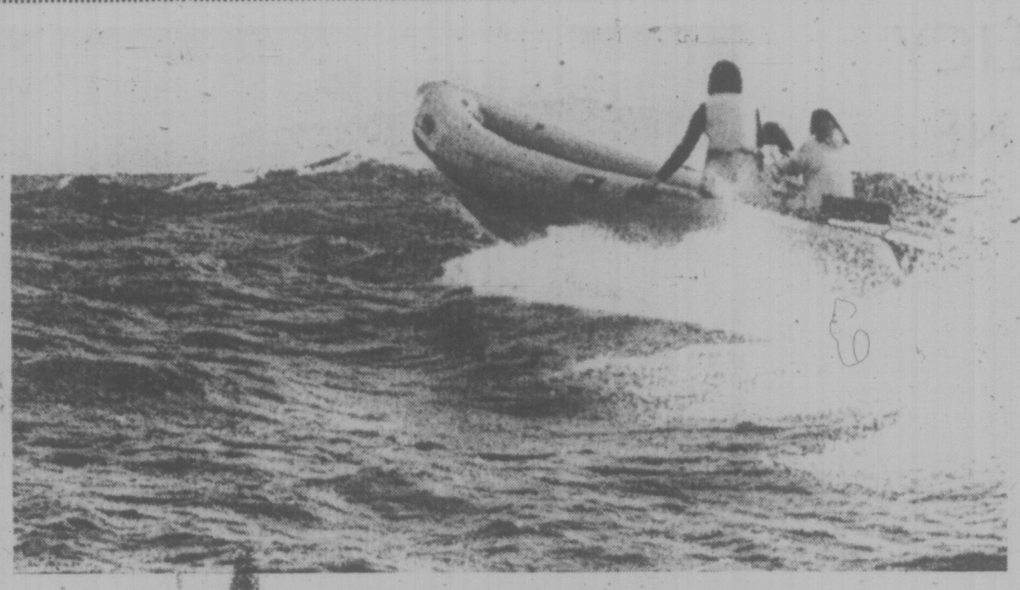
One source said the public works department was called in to conduct tests and these revealed insignificant particulate matter in the air. But the validity of the testing method was challenged by at least one staff member.

Any problem could be solved by spraying the asbestos-coated beams with a sealer but a source suggested the public works department had been "dragging its feet" in taking this step.

The job would have been much easier a few years ago when much less space had been developed but it is still practical, he said.

An estimated 100 people work in the curatorial tower.

The earlier letter to the Times, which claimed to represent the museum staff, complained about the "carnival atmosphere" developing in and around the museum and cited a lottery booth, stage, outdoor tables and soft drink machines as contributing to the "clutter."



Rescue boat heads out into the Strait on patrol

New Watch on Strait

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

A new marine rescue service goes into operation on Monday, providing a round-the-clock watch on the treacherous waters between Sooke Basin and Oak Bay Marina.

Providing that much-needed service are 36 students belonging to the Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific's sea rescue unit.

The unit is headed by Alejandro Bolz, 18 of Uruguay, who reports:

"We'll be concentrating on the main sport fishing areas and Race Rocks, which can be pretty dicey at times."

The unit has two 20-foot rescue boats, capable of 40 knots, made by students at the college.

The fiberglass-hulled boats, topped with inflatable tubes to ease the task of hauling victims inboard, were designed by retired British admiral Desmond Hoare.

Jim Moo-Young of Jamaica, 18, is in charge of one boat. Captain of the other is Edmundo Vianello, 18, of Venezuela.

"There'll be a watch of students on standby every minute of the night and day," Jim said. "And, there'll be a daily patrol of our area an hour before dusk."

The college at Pedder Bay will run its sea rescue unit on much the same lines as the one in Wales where Atlantic College students have earned an international reputation for their efficiency and enthusiasm.

Geared for every emergency, Alejandro explained the unit, composed of 26 boys and 10 girls, is well-trained.

Each member must have a Royal Life Saving Society bronze medallion for swimming and lifesaving capability, a St. John Ambulance first-aid certificate, besides being competent in boat handling, building and maintenance; basic mechanics, engine maintenance, electricity, coastal navigation and radio operation.

In addition, six unit members are qualified divers, capable of rescuing a victim trapped beneath a capsized boat.

The college, which has 200 students from 40 countries around the world, can be immediately contacted by both Canadian and American coast guard stations as well as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in an emergency.

Three VHF (very high frequency) radio sets — one at the college's radio headquarters and the others in the boats—ensure complete monitoring in an emergency.

Each boat is equipped with all necessary rescue gear, including exposure bags.

Alejandro and his two captains explained that these are strong plastic bags, large enough to contain a victim suffering from exposure and a member of the rescue boat's crew.

"The student would strip down and use his own body heat, if necessary to help warm the victim," Alejandro said.

Canada's west coast has the unenviable reputation of having the highest total of marine incidents in Canada.

In 1974, the Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre at CFB Esquimalt handled 1,679 marine incidents. Already this year, that number has increased to 1,727.

A rescue centre spokesman today welcomed the college's new service.

"We handle 50 per cent of all marine incidents in Canada," he said, "And a well-disciplined unit like this is a welcome addition."

Crime-Police Ratio Short 45% in Victoria

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Another 50 to 55 officers would be needed in the Victoria city police department if it adopted guidelines suggested by the B.C. Police Commission, an arbitration hearing was told Friday.

Vancouver deputy police chief Bob Stewart, a witness at the arbitration proceedings which will result in a binding contract settlement on the city and its police force, is an executive member of the recently-formed commission.

He told arbitrator Guy Barclay the commission's suggested yardstick for gauging the strength of municipal police forces is the ratio of police officers to criminal offences in the community concerned.

On this basis, he said, Victoria's actual strength should be increased by as least another 50 officers, or about 45 per cent.

Earlier testimony in the hearing at the Empress Hotel said the city police department's "authorized strength" last year was 130 officers, but it was actually seven below that number and had suffered a manpower deficiency for several years.

Claims of under-policing, the risks this poses for the community and the resultant damage to police morale were some of the key arguments presented by the Victoria Policemen's Union on the first two days of the hearing, which continues next week.

The union is represented by Victoria lawyer Dermod Owen-Flood and the city by Vancouver lawyer Jack Giles.

Stewart said in Vancouver the ratio is 24 officers per 1,000 Criminal Code offences, whereas Victoria's ratio is only 12.

He said in making an analysis of the manpower capability of all police forces in the province, the B.C. Police Commission did find that Victoria's was inadequate. The only other area of the province "regularly behind strength" was the city of Nelson.

A possible danger in this situation, Stewart noted, is that when law enforcement is stepped up in one area, crime tends to "blossom forth" in another when policing is less diligent.

"It is significant that when an all-out thrust was made against organized crime on the Lower Mainland by CLUE (the Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit) very soon it became necessary . . . to establish an arm of that unit on Vancouver Island; which indicates to me that criminal activity had in fact spread out and is now centring in other urban areas such as Victoria."

Asked by the police counsel if Victoria was acquiring some of the "hallmarks" of big-city crime, Stewart said problems similar to Vancouver's are becomkng evident here, but on a smaller scale because the city itself is smaller.

Stewart said he believes all municipal police forces in B.C. should have standard contracts governing pay and working conditions, but under cross-examination by Giles said the official position of the police commission is that federal and provincial subsidies should be forthcoming to make this possible.

He agreed that at present municipalities can't really afford the police forces they need, but said in the absence of subsidies that was a "hard fact of life" which must be accepted.

Giles claimed it was illogical to argue on the one hand that senior government subsidies are needed to achieve inter-force parity, but on the other that municipalities must meet arbitrary standards on police force strength regardless of the cost to the taxpayer.

He also challenged the rationale of the officers-per-crime-rate formula, describing it as "unrealiable and misleading" because only 25 per cent of the police officer's time is occupied by crime-related tasks.

Stewart replied that in the police commission's opinion it was a more realistic base for determining manpower needs than the traditional formula relating the number of police officers to the community's population.

Failure to recognize this earlier, he said, had resulted in the present situation where the average British Columbian runs a greater risk of becoming a crime victim than the citizen of any other province.

The city's case is scheduled to be presented next week.

Firm Pledges Pitch Stop

Two Victoria men have received more than $500 in compensation from a local automobile transmission company after complaining about the firm's business practices.

Lo-Cost Automatic Transmission Rebuilders Ltd. signed an agreeement with B.C.'s director of trade practices pledging not to repeat certain sales practices and agreeing to pay compensation to three consumers, including the two Victorians.

Among the sales practices complained of are:

—Advertising free inspections or free diagnosis when the sole purpose of such ads was not to provide such a service but to attract consumers;

—The use of a sales technique involving demonstration of metal particles, originating or purporting to originate from the oil or fulid in the transmission of the consumer's automobile "in an attempt to persuade the consumer that this indicated serious and abnormal wear when this was not the case;"

—Dismantling of a transmission of a consumer's auto when unnecessary or when necessary, the charging of an unnecessarily high fee;

—The performance or purported performance of work on the transmission of a consumer's automobile when such work was either not specifically authorized or was the subject of specific instructions that the work was not to be performed;

Those practices were listed in the agreement, known as an Assurance of Voluntary Compliance (AVC), which is a relatively new form of consumer action under the B.C. Trade Practices Act.

In the AVC, the government director has reasonable grounds to suspect the company of contravening consumer laws but the company does not acknowledge or admit to breaking the law.

Instead the company simply undertakes not to practice the listed sales techniques and also to reimburse and compensate the consumers who originally lodged the complaint.

Dr. Winston Nykodym of Victoria will be reimbursed $199.27 for the amount he paid to the company over and above the amount owing for authorized work and $77.45 for the cost of repairing a leak from the transmission following return of the car from the company.

Nykodym will also receive $100 as compensation for his inconvenience and deprivation of the use of his automobile.

Rodney Gittens will receive a reimbursement of $80.73 and a compensation for inconvenience of $100.

Lo-Cost also agreed to release Gittens from any indebtedness allegedly owing the company and to release any liens against the car.

The company must pay the consumer director $49 for the costs of the government's investigation into the matter, and must be willing to give a report to the director on its compliance with the act any time up until January 1, 1977.

VIPs Upstaged At Rec. Centre

Stuffy it wasn't.

Somewhat smug Oak Bay, with its reputation for doing things with delicate refinement and correctness, threw a surprise when it officially opened its new recreation centre Friday night.

The politicians and other VIPs were out in number, of course, but they were upstaged by the children.

High school students played music, minor hockey players showed how they get into shape, young curlers did their stuff and scores of youngsters tried out the swimming pool.

On ice, young figure skaters showed promise of things to come.

Premier Dave Barrett opened the centre, urging people not to be overawed by the plush furnishings to the point that youngsters stepping out of line on the odd occasion would be banished.

"Keep them (problem children), love them and nurture them," he said.

Mayor Brian Smith and Ken Hurn, chairman of Oak Bay's parks and recreation commission, clad in unconventional swim attire, cavorted in the pool for the spectators' enjoyment.

Today and Sunday, the centre will be open for general viewing, hundreds of school children having been given free passes for swimming and skating.

The centre, 20 years in the planning, contains a 25-metre pool, ice rink, six sheets of curling ice, a jet whirlpool, two saunas and a social lounge with full kitchen and catering facilities.

Police Probe Promoter

A music promoter whose business dealings in Victoria last summer are the subject of a police investigation has been charged with eight counts of defrauding $10,472.60 from merchants in the Vernon area.

Donald Mike Porter, 43, appeared in Vernon provincial court Friday and was remanded to Oct. 30 to obtain legal counsel.

Judge Jurgen Behnckie set bail at $3,000 with one or two sureties. A condition of the bail is the accused must stay at his brother's home in Salmon Arm from 9 p.m. to 7:30 a.m. each day.

Porter, who was arrested by RCMP in Kamloops earlier this week on the Vernon charges is also wanted for questioning in connection with the cancellation of the Billy Grammer show in Victoria Aug. 22 and in Vancouver Aug. 23.

Porter's firm, Don Jack Productions was promoting the show across Alberta and B.C.

The British Columbia Wheelchair, Sports and Recreation Association had agreed to sponsor it here and in Vancouver and provide an office and telephones in exchange for 25 per cent of all profits.

The sudden cancellation of the show aroused the interest of Victoria Better Business Bureau manager Bill Tindall.

Tindall said a number of local businessmen had bought ads in the show's program but the program was never distributed the night of the show.

He also said six telephone solicitors hired to sell program ads had never been paid. Some of the six have since filed complaints with the department of labor, Tindall said.

A Victoria police spokesman said the case is still under investigation.

MAYOR'S RACE LIST GROWS

Joe Richards of 541 Dalton is the latest candidate to enter the Victoria aldermanic race.

Richards, who filed papers Friday afternoon, describes himself as "the working man's candidate".

He wants city council increased to 10, two aldermen-at-large and eight elected by aldermanic districts (wards) for more equal representation.

It's Sad, Frustrating When Dog Has to Go

max low

So sad, that little front-page story in Thursday's Vancouver Province on Mr. Mac and Ticky.

I guess it was a combination of reporter Tony Eberts' heartrending prose and photographer Dave Paterson's appealing picture of Ticky, but I felt my eyes moistening and I thought again of Yogi Bear.

If you didn't read the story, it told of how Mr. Mac, a 65-year-old widower with a heart condition (he didn't want his real name known in case he was a burden on his friends) had to part with his little dog.

Mr. Mac had promised his late wife he would always care for Ticky — a six-year-old, 18-pound mostly-pomeranian mutt.

But, because the seedy little basement suite he now occupies has no plumbing and his doctor says he must stop climbing stairs, Mr. Mac has to move as soon as possible.

The agencies of the Vancouver Resources Board are trying to find him accommodation that he can afford on his fixed income ($240 a month) and chances are good that they will succeed. The catch, though — and for Mr. Mac it's a heart-breaking one — is that none of the subsidized housing likely to be available under the B.C. Housing Management Commission will allow tenants to keep pets.

And so on Wednesday, though his doctor would like him to keep his pet as the walks they went on together gave the old man the moderate exercise his heart needs, Mr. Mac parted with Ticky.

He was sad, frustrated and confused.

"I am not so old or sick that I cannot look after myself and Ticky," he said. "But they tell me there is no place for us, together. I would pay most of my money for such a place. I would go hungry to pay for it, yet they tell me the rents are too high and places to live in are too few, so nobody has to take people with pets. Not even very small, very quiet dogs . . ."

As reported Eberts says, "Anyone who has experienced the bond of affection between human and canine knows what a wrench it is to give up a dog." And I'm sure that many who read this have known that sadness at some time or other.

We knew it once, my wife and I, when we had to part with Yogi Bear, our tiny, very mixed-up dog we adopted in Iran.

Yogi was a strange little thing; a blend of many unknown breeds which together produced what was more like a small white fox than a dog.

Now I don't particularly like small yappy dogs, but when we first met Yogi he was living a rather precarious life with a large group of young people who were hitching their way around the world and just stopping over in Iran. Yogi wasn't happy there and he tried running away once but he was only about eight inches from the ground and had a rough three days fending for himself.

A couple of the young people were proof readers on Kayhan International, where I worked, and when we went to their place one night for dinner they were all talking about moving on. And, when they realized my wife was soft-hearted, they said they were going to have Yogi shot the next day.

That did it.

We took him home with us and very gradually he got over his fear and got to like living with people. In fact, he got to like it so much that we always felt he would much rather have been a person than a dog.

When it was time for us to leave Tehran, we were in a quandary. We knew no foreigners living there who would like to have Yogi and Iranians don't like dogs much.

There was nothing else for it — we would have to take him with us.

So, despite great misgivings and great expense, we sent Yogi Bear on ahead of us to England where he had to stay in quarantine for six months.

That, alas, proved the undoing of all our care and affection. Eight-inch Yogi, who hated all dogs (even those his own size) was put in a wire cage between the two of the most monstrous things I have ever seen — a great dane and a shaggy-legged Borzoi — and he was terrified.

Although we visited him during the six months, it didn't do any good. When he came out he decided that, not only did he not like dogs, he no longer cared much for people, either.

To get his point across, he first bit my mother on the ankle while she was visiting us, and systematically bit every other human ankle he could find in the apartment building in which we lived.

The vet said that because of his background he would probably never get over it. We tried a muzzle for a while but as soon as it was taken off, he was back looking for ankles again. By now, we had decided to emigrate to Canada and, as Yogi had even turned on us and wouldn't let us in our bedroom without a bite or two, we knew we couldn't take him.

A kind lady at the RSPCA said they would try to find him a home. But we knew no one would want him and he would be destroyed. And it was said.

As Mr. Mac found out, the dog is sad, too.

Ticky is so good, he says, "but last night she moaned all night, because she knew I was sad and she knew what was happening today."

And when we packed up Yogi's things and took him upstairs on a double-decker bus out in the country to the RSPCA, he wouldn't look at us. And, when we handed him over, we were certain we could see tears in his eyes.

That was sad, alright. But it was a long time ago and we have been able to have other dogs since.

But for a lonely old man, a dog can be everything. For Mr. Mac, losing Ticky is the end.
